Now, necessarily, in an argument on the question which the learned counsel so ably presented to the court, he went into some views not improperly at all, but from the very necessity of the case, as to what the return would possibly be. It was inevitable that he should, in explaining to your honor the view of the case he took, show what the return should be; not in precise and accurate terms, but to argue that as soon as this court should perceive by a statement properly made to it, in a form in which it could recognize and act upon, that a prisoner was held in custody by order of the House of Representatives as for a contempt, you would then immediately have to remand the case; that there was nothing further to be done with it. Well, may it please your honor, that is not a proposition of law which in my opinion is correct. It is not sustained by authority, and it is entirely contrary to principle for this reason—and I would adduce this one as the strongest—because it would make the liberty of every citizen of the United States depend upon the arbitrary will of the House of Representatives, or of the Senate; and whenever either of those bodies on a certain state of facts should say that the individual citizen was guilty of contempt, and so certify it, the courts of justice would have nothing further to do with the matter, and whatever the House of Representatives or the Senate chose to say was a breach of privilege, or chose to say was a contempt, would be conclusive. That is, that they would have unlimited and arbitrary power. There is no such idea of government entertained in our country, may it please your honor; there is no judge in the United States, either Federal or State, who ever announced such a doctrine from the bench; I trust there never will be. Such a doctrine never was permitted in Great Britain.

I do not go now into the argument fully of that part of the case. It will come up on the merits of this question, if we ever reach them. Your honor is familiar with the celebrated case of the printers, Stockdale against Hansard, in which the court of king's bench distinctly said, "We cannot consider the House of Commons merely by saying that the thing is a contempt makes it so. We have a right to go into the question and inquire whether a contempt has been committed." I do not know whether the case is fresh in the memory of the court, but I have it before me here; it is in the ninth volume.

The COURT. That is not my recollection of any case that I ever read of. I understand the doctrine to be that where a body has ordered a person into commitment for a contempt, that it is in the nature of a final judgment and it cannot be reviewed on a writ of habeas corpus; that is, if the body that has ordered the commitment has jurisdiction of the case.

Mr. DURANT. Shall I read a passage from this decision?

The COURT. What case is it?

Mr. DURANT. The case I alluded to of Stockdale against Hansard, 9 Adolphus & Ellis; or, perhaps, it is more accessible in Johnson's edition of the Common Law Reports, volume 36, page 91.

The COURT. What is the page in 9 Adolphus & Ellis?

Mr. DURANT. It is the first case in the volume, on page 91: "It is said the House of Commons is the sole judge of its own privileges." So I admit as far as proceedings of the House and some other things are concerned; but I do not think it follows that they have the power to declare what their privileges are, so as to preclude inquiry whether what they declare are part of their privileges.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. That we admit.

The COURT. There comes up the question of jurisdiction. I say where the jurisdiction is established the justice of the commitment cannot be gone into on a habeas corpus.

Mr. DURANT. The court there decides whether the commitment was for a breach of privilege or not, as a judicial question, could not be finally determined by the House of Commons, and that was subsequently proved by other decisions of the court of king's bench.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Now, in that case, if it is not an interruption, I see the language of the court quoted here is this: "But it is said that the question of the privilege of the House of Commons comes directly before the court on the pleadings, and therefore, upon all the authorities, it is quite clear that it is not competent for this court to inquire into the question of privilege," &c.

Mr. DURANT. What book is that?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. That is from the same authority as is cited by Judge Cranch in this case.

Mr. DURANT. I am reading from the book itself.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. You will find that there.

Mr. DURANT. It is much better to seek the fountain-head than to go along the rivers. That, however, is a subject more germane to a discussion on the merits. I therefore invoke the action of this court in favor of the uniform rule of Great Britain and this country, and in pursuance of the positive declaration of the statute, that whenever a citizen is deprived of his liberty by any one, that one who so deprives him, being ordered by the court to make a return to show cause of his detention, must at the same time with the return produce the body of the prisoner.

Mr. FISHER. May it please your honor, with all due deference to the superior learning and experience of my learned friend who has appeared here in behalf of this prisoner, Richard B. Irwin, I think I may say that his argument to your honor has been addressed, not to the motion that is now pending before your honor, but has been addressed more to the merits of the case, as if we were trying this cause after a full return had been made, or as if we were attempting to make a full return without a production of the body. Now, may it please your honor, the motion that is now pending before you is a motion that the petition upon which this writ was issued shall be dismissed, and that the writ itself shall be revoked because of its having been improvidently issued. My learned colleague has read to your honor one case, and has referred to another case in which it has been clearly decided and settled that when two jurisdictions come in conflict, when a party is imprisoned rather by one jurisdiction, and an appeal has been made for a writ of habeas corpus and an application been made for a writ of habeas corpus to another jurisdiction, the moment that the latter jurisdiction finds, ascertains in any mode, no matter what that mode may be, that the other jurisdiction has been lawfully put in exercise, then the jurisdiction appealed to for the writ of habeas corpus can go no further.

Now let us reason on this case by analogy. Suppose that your honor had, sitting in the circuit court, on some morning after coming into court, upon a motion by a member of the bar, allowed a judgment to be taken by default against a defendant, what is more common, may it please your honor, than for the counsel on the other side to come in and give information to your honor that the judgment by default had been improvidently given, and your honor would then take it off. Suppose that a chancellor shall issue his writ of injunction, or his writ of sequestration, or his writ of attachment; suppose your honor issues his writ of attachment against a witness, and it should be made known by the production of your records, or in any other way whatever, that the writ had been improvidently issued, then it is to be revoked.

Well, let us go further. Suppose that your honor is sitting here holding a criminal court or a circuit court, and at the other end of this building the supreme court of the District of Columbia is sitting in banc. A witness is brought up before your honor, and he refuses to give testimony. Your honor adjudges that the questions that are put to him are pertinent and relevant to the matter in issue before the court and jury; and because he refuses to testify you adjudge him to be in contempt of a privilege of the court, of the authority of the court, and for that reason, upon that judgment so passed and determined upon by your honor, you commit him to prison until he shall purge himself of the contempt; but while in prison he presents his application to the court in banc to be relieved from prison—why, your honor would certainly say that that court, if it had issued the writ on the motion of the learned counsel in his behalf, or upon the presentation by some private individual, or written application—if the writ had issued, and upon an inspection of the records simply the clerk of the court, in the most informal manner, no matter how, had produced to the court sitting in banc the record of the criminal court presided over by your honor, showing your honor's judgment whereby he was committed for a contempt of this court, certainly the writ would be revoked eo instantia that the court became apprised of the fact that it had been issued in a lawful and due exercise of your authority.

Now, may it please your honor, that is simply what we ask in this case, and nothing more. We contend that this petition on its face shows no case. I beg leave to call your honor's attention again to the wording of the petition:

"Your petitioner further shows that the material facts concerning his detention, as he understands them, are that he was summoned before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and questioned concerning certain matters alleged, but erroneously, to be relative to an investigation of an alleged improper use of money to obtain from Congress a subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which question petitioner declined to answer, because the committee had no authority or legal right to propound them; that your petitioner was then taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, and on the 7th day of January, A. D. 1875, brought to the bar of the House, where certain questions were propounded to him which he refused to answer, because the House of Representatives had no legal right to propound such questions."

There, again, is the opinion of the witness. Now, suppose, may it please your honor, that a witness were brought up to this stand and that your honor were holding a criminal or a circuit term, and certain questions were propounded to him which he refused to answer, and your honor had deemed them pertinent and relevant, and had committed him to jail: would the court sitting at the other end or any judge of this court issue his writ; or if he had issued his writ would he have permitted that writ to live one moment after he had become apprised of the fact that your honor had committed the prisoner in the exercise of your lawful powers, and that you acted as judge holding the criminal or circuit term of this court?

Reading again from the petition:

"And on his refusal he was again ordered into custody and confinement, to the end that proceedings in due course of law might be instituted against him by the district attorney of the United States for this District, under the act of January 24, 1857." (11 United States Statutes at Large, pages 155 and 156.)

"Your petitioner respectfully represents that his arrest and confinement were contrary to law and in violation of his constitutional and legal rights as a citizen of the United States."

Now, may it please your honor, I say that before we shall be compelled to make a return—a regular and formal return to this writ of habeas corpus, which has been issued by your honor—we have a right to go into the presence of your honor, and by an answer, not a formal return to the writ, but by an answer which shall apprise your honor, give your honor fully to know and understand the authority by which the prisoner is held, and that that authority is right and proper, and has been legally and lawfully exercised. Then, I say, that having the right to go into the presence of your honor and show that, your honor by the decisions which have been read cannot go one step further. Now, that is just what I propose to do, may it please your honor, to read the answer that is made by the respondent in this case, so that your honor can be apprised of the facts and know by what authority the prisoner is held in his custody, in order that you may, in obedience to the law, the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States, decide that you will go no further in regard to the matter, but will revoke this writ and dismiss the petition.

Judge Fisher then proceeded to read the paper.

Mr. DURANT. Is that the return that you are about to read?

Judge FISHER. No; it is the answer of the respondent.

Mr. DURANT. Is that the return to the writ of habeas corpus?

Judge FISHER. You will see when it is read that it is not a return, because it does not produce the body, nor does it give any excuse for not producing it. It is an answer drawn up simply for the purpose of putting his honor in possession of the facts, which we would have had a right to do in the first instance if we had been notified of it. Had the House of Representatives, through its Speaker, received notice of this application, we should have the right to have laid before his honor Judge MacArthur the facts that are set forth in this answer.

The COURT. Is this a paper——

Judge FISHER. It is upon this paper that our motion is founded.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. The petition also.

Judge FISHER. The petition is substantially the same as this paper which I hold in my hand, with this exception that the petition sets out what is not true, that the prisoner was put into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms for the purpose of being treated criminally in the supreme court of the District of Columbia under the act of the 24th of January, 1857, whereas he is put there, as the resolution itself shows, for the purpose of having him purge himself of the contempt, by going before the Committee on Ways and Means at any time when he may see proper to do so and giving the testimony which the Committee on Ways and Means and House of Representatives, in its judicial capacity, adjudged were pertinent and proper questions to be answered by the prisoner.

The COURT. That paper ought to have been read at the commencement of the argument, not at the close of it.

Judge FISHER. I proposed to read it yesterday, but your honor would not permit me.

The COURT. No; this morning, upon the opening of the argument all the papers you purposed reading ought to have been presented.

Judge FISHER. Of course our learned friend on the other side will have the privilege of replying.

Mr. DURANT. The proposal that is made now is to read what is to all intents and purposes a return to the writ of habeas corpus. The Sergeant-at-Arms comes in and says to the court that he has to declare in answer to the directions the court has given him in that writ—you may call it by whatever name you please; the substance of the thing is not altered by its nomenclature, and it brings us to the same position that we have always been in. I understand the return cannot be made unless in pursuance of the provisions of the statute, which require that the body should be simultaneously produced. That is the tenor of the writ. That is what the statute says. Now, if that is to be decided beforehand, and the party is to be permitted to make his return before it is decided whether he is to bring in the body of the prisoner or not, then the motion I make is virtually overruled.

The COURT. This paper ought to have been read in the beginning of the argument, and the other side should have had an opportunity to deny its statements. The other side has a right to have access to those papers and to make a reply to them.

Judge FISHER. We propose to give them the exercise of that right now.

Mr. DURANT. The statement made in advance was——

The COURT. I am willing to allow every latitude, but really I cannot have this case argued piecemeal in this way.

Judge FISHER. If we cannot read this paper in order to enlighten your honor's judgment in the premises, then of course our case is at an end.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. We can still rely upon the petition. That discloses ——

Mr. DURANT. Certainly.

The COURT. I think it would be irregular to interpose that document now, at this stage of the argument. It would involve a rehearing of the case upon a new presentation of the facts of the case. I see you have a document there, more or less elaborate, covering a good many pages.

Judge FISHER. The answer of the respondent does not occupy a great deal of paper. It consists mostly of resolutions of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. The court will remember, probably, that during my argument I did not propose in terms to read this, but I did say that I held in my hand, ready to present to the court, the paper that under our motion we desire to bring to the attention of your honor.

The COURT. Do you desire to read anything more than what you did read, which were the resolutions of yesterday?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I did not propose to read it, because I did not know whether it was necessary to detain the court, the fact being that the substance of the same paper that we had desired to present to the court is really contained in the petition. The fact is, however, that I did really make a formal offer to the court in regard to reading the same, having the paper in my hand at the time.

Judge FISHER. The facts set forth in the petition correspond substantially with the statement made in the answer that I now propose to read, with a view of enlightening the judgment of the court in regard to this motion that is pending. They correspond with our statement, except as to the reason why the custody of the prisoner was given to the Sergeant-at-Arms, and they differ in this respect, inasmuch as that petition states that the custody is illegal; that these questions were not pertinent and proper to be put to him, or proper to be answered by him, whereas we aver they were. That is about the substance of it. Those are the only matters regarding which they differ. But appended to this paper are the resolutions, which will enable the court to be put fully in the possession of a history of the case. We have not the slightest objection to giving Mr. Durant any time that he may choose to reply to anything that may be presented in this paper.

Mr. DURANT. I desire no other time than is necessary to conduct the case regularly.

The COURT. I think, Judge Fisher, you had better confine your remarks to the other branch of this application, which was discussed by your colleague as well as by Mr. Durant, as to the necessity of producing the body.

Judge FISHER. I will take up, then, the petition of the relator, and I will notice the authorities that have been cited by Mr. Durant, the authorities that have been cited on our own side, and pursue that line of argument, if your honor thinks we ought not to read this paper which we call an answer, but which my learned friends on the other side insist is a return to the writ. Now, may it please your honor, it is clearly shown in the petition, first, that this prisoner in the custody of Mr. Ordway was committed to his custody. First, it says that he was examined before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and questioned concerning certain matters, alleged erroneously, as he states, to be relative to an investigation of an alleged improper use of money to obtain from Congress a subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. There is one fact set out clearly, that he was duly summoned by the House of Representatives to appear before the committee of the House of Representatives, its duly constituted organ, to make inquiry into such matters, to be used before that committee as a witness; that he appeared before that committee; and that while he was before that committee certain questions were put to him by the committee which he declined to answer upon the ground, as he deemed, that the committee had no authority or legal right to propound them.

Mr. DURANT. "As he deemed?" Are those words there?

Judge FISHER. O, no; they are not there; I am not reading the petition now. "That he declined to answer certain questions which were put to him in regard to the alleged improper use of money to obtain from Congress a subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company."

Now, there is one fact. He is brought before the committee regularly; he is regularly interrogated by the committee; questions are put to him; and he refuses to answer those questions. Then it goes on to state that "your petitioner was then taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives." Your honor is to presume that every officer does his duty. That is a well-settled principle of law, that whatever is done by an officer the law presumes to be done rightly and properly, until the contrary shall have been made to appear. He says that he was illegally taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms and retained in his custody until the 7th day of January, which should be the 6th day of January, 1875, when he was brought before the bar of the House, where certain questions were propounded to him.

Now, your honor is to presume that he would not have been brought before the bar of the House except it had been done in a legal and proper way; except the Sergeant-at-Arms had been instructed by a resolution of the House of Representatives. Your honor is bound to take notice of all such resolutions and orders as are passed by the House of Representatives; to take a judicial cognizance of them; and such resolution was passed.

"And after he had been brought before the bar of the House, certain questions were propounded to him and that he refused to answer them, because"—

In his opinion—

"The House of Representatives had no legal right to propound such a question."

Mr. DURANT. Are the words "in his opinion" in the petition.

Judge FISHER. O, no.

"And on his refusal he was again ordered into custody and confinement, to the end that proceeding in due course of law might be instituted against him by the district attorney of the United States for this district."

Now, if your honor, bound as your honor is to take cognizance of all orders, resolutions, and matters of public notoriety which transpire in the House of Representatives, being bound to take judicial cognizance of them—your honor is informed of the fact that this witness not only refused to testify before the committee when he was lawfully summoned to appear before the committee, and when lawful and proper questions were put to him, pertinent to the subject which was being investigated by the committee, but after he had been brought before the bar of the House and the Speaker of the House, under a resolution or order of the House, had put to him the same two questions that he had refused to answer before the committee, and having answered one of them refused to answer the other, and was contumacious and recusant and guilty of contempt, your honor will take judicial cognizance of the fact by a resolution passed by the House of Representatives on the same day when he was so in contempt he was adjudged in contempt by the House of Representatives; and you will further take judicial cognizance of the fact, that by a further proceeding by the House, or further order of the House, or resolution, the prisoner having been adjudged guilty of contempt by the authorities of the House, the Sergeant-at-Arms was ordered by the Speaker to take him into his custody, and take him to the jail of the District of Columbia. Now, your honor is apprised of all these facts, whether by our answer which we are not permitted to read, or whether by the fact that your honor is bound to take judicial notice of the proceedings of the House of Representatives, all its orders and all its resolutions. No matter in what way you became acquainted with these facts, when your honor has once been certified of them, has been made acquainted with them, your honor, according to the decisions that we have here, which were read by my learned friend this morning, can go no further. The court says in this case in 21 Howard:

"We do not question the authority of State court or judge, who is authorized by the laws of the State to issue the writ of habeas corpus, to issue it in any case where the party is in prison within its territorial limits, provided it does not appear when the application is made that the person imprisoned is in custody under the authority of the United States. The court or judge has a right to inquire, in this mode of proceeding, for what cause and by what authority the prisoner is confined within the territorial limits of the State sovereignty. And it is the duty of the marshal or other person having the custody of the prisoner to make known to the judge or court, by a proper return, the authority by which he holds him in custody. This right to inquire by process of habeas corpus, and the duty of the officer to make a return, grows necessarily out of the complex character of our Government, and the existence of two distinct and separate sovereignties within the same territorial space, each of them restricted in its powers, and each within its sphere of action prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, independent of the other. But after the return is made and the State judge or court judicially apprised that the party is in custody under the authority of the United States, they can proceed no further. They then know that the prisoner is within the dominion and jurisdiction of another government, and that neither the writ of habeas corpus nor any other process issued under State authority can pass over the line of division between the two sovereignties."

And further on the court says:

"No State judge or court, after they are judicially informed that the party is imprisoned under the authority of the United States, has any right to interfere with him or to require him to be brought before them."

Now there, may it please your honor, the question is decided beyond all cavil in regard to a State court, that when the court or judge is judicially informed that the party is imprisoned under the authority of the United States it has not any right to interfere, or require him to be brought before them. If the State court cannot interfere with the United States authority when it becomes judicially informed that the party is imprisoned by the authority of the United States, how is it a United States court can interfere? One court cannot interfere when it becomes judicially cognizant of the fact that the prisoner is held under the authority of another jurisdiction duly and properly exercised. Now, I say, that when your honor considers that you are bound to take judicial cognizance of all orders or resolutions of the House of Representatives, and being bound to take judicial cognizance of that, then you are informed that this party in this case is imprisoned under the authority of the United States House of Representatives by the warrant of its Speaker, duly issued and directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms to keep this prisoner in custody. Now, I say, may it please your honor, that these facts appear not only by the petition, but your honor is bound to take judicial notice of them, and so having been informed, we contend that your honor, according to these decisions, cannot go one step further.

You cannot require us to bring the body of the prisoner into court. You cannot require us to make any return showing why we did not bring him into court after you have become cognizant of the fact, judicially made acquainted with the fact, that the prisoner is held by the authority of the House of Representatives, which authority was legally and constitutionally exercised. The same principle has been decided in the case in 13 Wallace—the case of Ex parte Tarble; it will be found on page 410.

"This right to inquire by process of habeas corpus, and the duty of the officer to make a return, 'grows necessarily,' says Mr. Chief Justice Taney, 'out of the complex character of our Government and the existence of two distinct and separate sovereignties within the same territorial space, each of them restricted in its power, and each within its sphere of action prescribed by the Constitution of the United States independent of the other. But after the return is made, and the State judge or court judicially apprised that the party is in custody under the authority of the United States, they can proceed no further.'"

The court then goes on further:

"It would have been unnecessary to enforce, by any extended reasoning such as the Chief Justice uses, the position that when it appeared to the judge or officer issuing the writ that the prisoner was held under undisputed lawful authority, he should proceed no further."

The court then goes on further:

"No Federal judge even could, in such case, release the party from imprisonment, except upon bail when that was allowable. The detention being by admitted lawful authority, no judge could set the proceeding aside. All that is meant by the language used is that the State judge or State court should proceed no further when it appears from the application of the party or the return made that the prisoner is held by an officer of the United States under what, in truth, purports to be the authority of the United States; that is, an authority the validity of which is to be determined by the Constitution and laws of the United States. If a party thus held be illegally imprisoned, it is for the courts or judicial officers of the United States, and those courts or officers alone, to grant him release."

I say, then, to recapitulate, may it please your honor, that by analogy to other proceedings in courts, the issuing of any other writ, the issuing, for instance, of an execution where the court becomes satisfied upon the inspection of the record, or by any other means, that that execution was improvidently issued—for instance, having no judgment as its foundation—or it appearing on the record that the judgment had been satisfied, or anything of that character, wherever the court becomes lawfully apprised of the fact that the execution was improvidently issued, the court will call in the writ. So in the case of an injunction issued out of chancery, or a writ of sequestration, or a writ of attachment, if the court upon an inspection of the record, either on its own motion or when its attention is called to it by a party in interest, or even by a stranger, no matter how the court shall become acquainted with the fact if it become lawfully and judicially acquainted with the fact that the writ was issued without authority, that it was wrongfully issued, and improvidently issued, the court would even of its own motion revoke the writ and recall it. So I say in regard to a writ of habeas corpus. If at one end of this building a judge were holding one term of court and another judge holding another, and a party being committed for a contempt of the one court should apply to the other, and a writ of habeas corpus should be granted, the moment that the judge who granted the writ of habeas corpus should be judicially informed of the fact that he had issued that writ improvidently, he would revoke the writ, and the case would there be ended, and he could go no further.

Mr. DURANT. I believe I have the right to close this discussion.

The COURT. No; I think they make the motion.

Mr. DURANT. The motion and the affirmative of the question comes from my side that the prisoner should be brought into court; that is the affirmative. They say he must not be brought into court, because on the face of the petition the court has no jurisdiction of the body.

Judge FISHER. No, the motion pending before the court is one to dismiss the petition and to revoke the writ.

Mr. DURANT. I think we have the opening and close on this matter.

The COURT. I do not think so. I think the counsel for the respondent have that privilege.

Mr. DURANT. Very well; I yield. I was about to state why I thought I had the close.

Judge MACARTHUR then said:

In granting the right to renew this discussion to-day it was done out of sincere deference and respect to perhaps the most important branch of our Government, the House of Representatives, and to the eminent counsel who represent it here in regard to the matter now before the court. If I have a consciousness in regard to this proceeding more profound than another, it is that it may be thoroughly exhaustive, and that the conclusion may be impartial and in entire accordance with the law. I have no doubt that whatever action the House has taken, or in whatever action it may take hereafter, the argument will be actuated by the highest sense of public duty and impartial justice. I think that the two jurisdictions, acting under such inspirations, may come to a conclusion in this matter which will harmonize any conflict that may exist. At all events nothing on my part shall be wanting to produce that result consistently with my duty in the administration of the law.

The writ of habeas corpus, I might be permitted to say in the outset, is a writ peculiarly for the administration of the judiciary. No other power in the land can administer the law of habeas corpus. And so valuable is it that the Constitution has declared that it shall never be suspended unless in case of war. It is utterly beyond the power of legislative bodies or judicial tribunals to interfere with the operation and the fullest execution of this writ, which has been embalmed both in the history and spirit of our institutions. Whenever a case occurs for its operation, the court cannot, will not, dare not deny it. The motion presented, in the aspect in which it was discussed by Judge Fisher, goes to the technical presentation in the initiation of this proceeding. It may be observed generally that with regard to a writ appertaining exclusively to personal liberty the court would not insist with great rigor upon formalities, but would look rather at the substance and object to be accomplished, and would not allow the effect of this great writ to be defeated through any imperfection of a mere formal or technical character.

It is said that this writ was improvidently issued. It is so much the custom of judges to issue this writ, and our ideas are so fixed with regard to the liberality with which it is sent forth by the judiciary, that probably this is the first occasion on which the objection was ever taken that a writ of habeas corpus was improvidently issued. My own experience recalls no instance of the kind. The extended research of the eminent counsel in behalf of the motion now made has not enabled them to produce a similar application. It will be remembered that when the motion was first presented, it was with some hesitation that I entertained it, and I entertained it more out of respect to the earnestness and conscientiousness that appeared to actuate the counsel in making it than what I considered it to be an exact compliance with the rights of the case. I have listened to that argument with great interest, and if it were a concession which I had made in the first place, the court has been amply compensated by the light and information which has been thrown upon the subject by the argument of counsel. The motion, then, in the first place, is to quash this writ on the ground that it was issued without just cause upon the very face of the proceeding

In his petition, the relator alleges that he is detained by N. G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives. He states the cause of this detention, as he was required to by the statute, as well as he was informed upon the subject, that there was a subject-matter under investigation before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House; that upon being examined before that committee he declined to answer questions there put to him, he alleging that the committee had no power to put the questions to him, and had no authority from the House to put the inquiries to him. Subsequently, upon being arraigned at the bar of the House other questions were put to him, which he declares in his petition the House had no right to address to him, and that he refused to respond; whereupon they committed him and ordered him into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. Now, here is a statement, to some extent, of the cause of his detention. The particular interrogatories that were propounded to him are not stated, but he distinctly avers that the inquiries were beyond the power either of the House or of the committee. In a word, he impeached their jurisdiction.

Now, I have more than once remarked in these discussions that the power of the House to commit for contempt was so well established that it was not to be questioned any longer, and I have also announced that a person in custody by their order for a contempt, the judgment in such case was final if within the jurisdiction of the House. This jurisdiction is impeached upon the face of this instrument. I think, therefore, it cannot be said that the writ was issued improvidently, but I go a step further. I regard this motion to quash the writ as founded upon matters of form, and it is therefore to be disposed of upon technical principles. A motion to quash a pleading is like a demurrer. It admits the truth of the facts that are properly and legally stated in the pleadings demurred to, so that upon this motion we are to assume that the allegations of this petition are true; that is, they are admitted to be so for the purpose simply of this argument.

They may be false in point of fact, but for the special purpose under consideration there is an assumption of their truth indulged by the law. So far, therefore, as the motion is concerned to quash this writ upon the ground that it was improvidently issued, I think the motion must fail. The debate, however, has taken a wider scope than this, and it is denied that the officer making this return is required to produce the body. In view of the fact that this man stands charged with contempt, and in the custody of the officer of the House, there can be no doubt from what has transpired here, from what has transpired in the House, that there is a serious difference of opinion in regard to this very particular. It undoubtedly is the general understanding of the judiciary of the country as well as the bar that the body must be produced upon a return to a writ of habeas corpus.

Previous to the enactment of the great statute, the habeas corpus act of Charles I, the writ had been greatly abused by the persons to whom it was directed, in delaying to make the returns, but I think there is no instance, even in that dark period, of a case in which the imperative duty of the officer to return the body was questioned. It was the abuse in not producing the body promptly that led to the enactment of that great statute, which directed the officer to whom the writ was addressed to make his return within three days after the service thereof; and most of the States have incorporated that act into their State statutes, and the Congress of the United States has substantially adopted it into the Revised Statutes which are now the statute law of the country. This statute directs that this writ of habeas corpus may issue in every case where a person is held under any color of authority of the United States, and the officer is directed to make his return within five days, and along with his return to produce the body of the person so held in custody. This is not discretionary. It was not designed that any proceeding under the statute, with regard to practice upon the writ of habeas corpus, should be left to the discretion of judges or of courts or of officers of any court.

The mandate of the statute is that he shall produce the body. Authorities have been read, at least, in which the production of the body was dispensed with, but under very peculiar circumstances. It was where a State court had issued the writ, and where the relator was in confinement under process issuing from a United States court. The two jurisdictions were entirely separate and independent, the sovereignties were different; but here we are all under the same law, and I think upon a careful examination of that very case, it will recognize that the writ may issue in all cases where the government is the same and where the same law extends its dominion over both. I have asked my brother Wylie about the Bell case, and he states to me that he did not think it was necessary that the body should be produced. There was a return made to the effect that he was held in custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms, under an order of either the Senate or the House of Representatives, and that he became aware of that fact and discharged the writ, and did not require the production of the body. I understand from him, however, that the discussion was not very elaborate on the occasion, and it perhaps is therefore not a controlling decision; and although I have for all the legal views of my brother Wylie the greatest respect and deference, and if it had been a well-considered instance that had passed through his examination, I should certainly have long hesitated before differing from him.

The conclusion, therefore, to which I come is similar to that which was announced yesterday. I think it is the imperative duty of the officer to produce the body. I regret extremely that the House of Representatives should take a different view. I read the statute, which is the law of Congress and the law of this court, as leaving no discretion, as making the production of the body an indispensable and necessary incident to the proceeding.

I may repeat, that while Congress has a just and proper sensitiveness upon the question of privilege, that law, the statute law, is greater than privilege, and yet I think there is not a member of this court that would infringe on that privilege to the ten thousandth part of the diameter of a hair. I certainly would not, because I fully recognize not only the power which Congress has to protect itself, but I should uphold it in every just exercise of that power. But as this law binds me, so I must decide. I trust indeed that this matter may be accommodated by compliance with the law in some form.

At the conclusion of the judge's ruling, counsel for the House, for the respondent, entered into consultation. After some fifteen minutes spent in this way, and the counsel having apparently concluded such consultation, the court said: "Judge Fisher, is there any further action contemplated at present?"

Judge FISHER. I do not know that we have any further duties to perform here, may it please your honor, in the premises. We await the action of your honor.

The COURT. I have just acted.

Judge FISHER. Yes, your honor has refused to grant our motion, as I understand.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Of course the position is one, your honor, of singular embarrassment and difficulty. The Sergeant-at-Arms feels, as he interprets the orders of the House, that he is to obey the orders of the House as a sworn officer of that body. He cannot do otherwise; he must take the consequences of obeying that authority to which he is especially amenable under his commission and oath of office. And I feel a reluctance and hesitancy, I confess, after all the indulgence that the court has so kindly given to us in the way of time to consider and to consult, to ask for further time. I do not make that application in that form, but I do make this suggestion as perhaps one that may relieve the difficulty; I know not. Your honor can tell as well as I; but if an order for examination, an order of this court or of the judge, should issue, directing the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House to show cause why he should not be attached for contempt of this court, there would naturally, as a sequence, come a time for the purpose of showing cause why he should not be attached.

Now, I barely suggest that time may be allowed to him—possibly under the views your honor may take of the exigencies of the case—may be allowed to him now, if you please, without any motion for attachment intervening, or any order to show cause why attachment should not issue. That time may result, for aught I know, in solving this difficulty. I cannot anticipate, any more than the court can, what action the House, if any, may take in the premises. I only know that as my client interprets the action of the House he has no election, no choice.

The COURT. That is a question, Mr. Shellabarger, that it is impossible for me to enlighten your client upon.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I know; and therefore my suggestion, as far as it has any power or practical bearing, is simply this: whether it would not be wise, all things considered, to adjourn this case over until to-morrow, so that anything may be done in the way of deciding this question that the parties concerned, including the respondent and the House of Representatives, may deem wise in the premises. If that suggestion is not a good one, then no other one occurs to me to make, and the case must take the course which your honor, in your wisdom, may deem wise.

The COURT. Probably a few more hours for reflection might produce a result favorable to harmony in this matter. I am desirous to give every opportunity for reflection and deliberation, both here and elsewhere. I will therefore adjourn the further consideration of this matter until such time as the House will have an opportunity to act upon it, if they are disposed to.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Will that time be fixed by your honor to suit your own pleasure? We will then report to the House what the action of the court is in this case.

The COURT. Does the House sit on Saturday?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. They are in session to-day, your honor; and if the report of the condition of the case should make it necessary, doubtless they would sit to-morrow in order to dispose of the question.

The COURT. Then I will call the matter up at one o'clock to-morrow. Until that time the matters may remain as they now are.

Third day's proceedings.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 16, 1875.

At one o'clock the judge entered the court-room and took his position upon the bench. Counsel for the respective parties, and the respondent, Mr. Ordway, having in custody the prisoner, R. B. Irwin, had previously entered the court-room and taken their positions at the table.

The COURT. Gentlemen, I am now ready to hear anything that you may have to say in regard to the matter before us.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. May it please your honor, after the adjournment of yesterday which your honor had the kindness to grant us, as intimated to your honor, we proceeded to lay the matter and posture of this case before the House of Representatives; whereupon the House took the action which is disclosed by the following resolution. There is a certified copy of the resolution here somewhere, but as it is not conveniently at hand, with the permission of the court I will read from the RECORD:

Mr. Shellabarger then read as follows:

"Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, directed to make careful return to the writ of habeas corpus in the case of Richard B. Irwin that the prisoner is duly held by authority of the House of Representatives to answer in the proceeding against him for contempt; and that the Sergeant-at-Arms take with him the body of the said Irwin before the said court when making such return, as required by law."

We now make that return, the body of the relator being in court.

Judge FISHER. I will now proceed, may it please your honor, to read the return.

Judge Fisher then read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, to wit:

The President of the United States to N. G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, greeting:

You are hereby commanded to have the body of Richard B. Irwin, detained under your custody, as it is said, together with the day and cause of his being taken and detained, by whatever name he may be called in the same, before one of the justices of the supreme court of the said District, at the City Hall, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, on Tuesday the 12th day of January, 1875, at twelve o'clock noon of said day, to do and receive whatever shall then and there be considered of in this behalf; and have then there this writ.

Witness Arthur MacArthur, one of the justices of said court, the 9th day of January, 1875.

By order of Justice MacArthur:

R. J. MEIGS, Clerk.

To the Hon. ARTHUR MACARTHUR:
Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia:

The undersigned, Nehemiah G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the United States of America, respectfully represents that in obedience to the command of the within writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, the said undersigned makes the following return, to wit:

That ever since the first Monday in the month of December, in the year of our Lord 1873, the undersigned has held and still continues to hold the office of Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives aforesaid; that the said House of Representatives was in session at the time of the arrest of Richard B. Irwin, the relator named in the said writ, and was for a long time before that, and also thereafter, and at all the times hereinafter mentioned, lawfully in session.

That prior to the 21st day of December, A. D. 1874, and when said House was duly in session in the city of Washington, and District of Columbia, the said House duly referred to one of the standing committees, to wit, to the Committee on Ways and Means, the investigation of a certain matter coming within the constitutional and legal cognizance of said House, and within its power to make inquiry, and among which was investigation into, that is to say, the subject-matter of, the use and employment of money for the purpose of procuring legislation by the Congress of the United States, in aid of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; and that, in order to facilitate and make effectual said investigation and inquiry, when so duly in session as aforesaid, passed an order or resolution in the words following, to wit:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means are hereby authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers and administer oaths in all matters from time to time pending and under examination before said committee."

And that afterward, and in virtue and pursuance of the authority of said resolution and of the power of the said committee acting as the duly-constituted organ of said House, the said committee duly summoned and caused to appear before it the said Richard B. Irwin, to give testimony before said committee touching certain matters pertinent to the aforesaid subject-matter of inquiry then pending before said committee, and that the said Richard B. Irwin was then and there duly sworn according to law to give testimony before said committee pertinent to said subject-matter then and there under investigation as aforesaid before said committee, and that the said Richard B. Irwin was then and there required by said committee to disclose the names of the persons whom he employed to aid him in procuring the subsidy from Congress in 1872 for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and was asked by said committee what was the largest sum paid by him to any one person to aid him in procuring that subsidy; and that the said Richard B. Irwin, then being under examination as such witness, as aforesaid, wholly refused to answer said question and to make said disclosure so required of him by said committee as aforesaid; which conduct and refusal to answer as aforesaid was by the said committee afterward, to wit, the 21st day of December, 1874, and while the said House was duly in session, reported to the said House for its adoption thereon; and that the House of Representatives aforesaid, thereupon, then and there, in the exercise of its constitutional and legal jurisdiction and power, and touching the subject-matter so reported to it by said committee, made and passed the following order, that is to say:

"Ordered, That the Speaker issue his warrant, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms attending this House, or his deputy, commanding him to take into custody forthwith, wherever to be found, the body of Richard B. Irwin, and him bring to the bar of the House, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and in the mean time keep the said Irwin in custody to await the further order of the House."

And that, in pursuance of the order of said House last aforesaid, this respondent, as Sergeant-at-Arms, by virtue of a warrant to him duly issued in pursuance of said last-mentioned order, as aforesaid, brought before the bar of said House on the 6th day of January, 1875, and while said House was in session, as aforesaid, the said Richard B. Irwin, who was then and there fully heard by said House upon the matter named in said order last mentioned, on which he was required to show cause as in said order stated; and that thereupon the said House adopted the following order; that is to say:

"Resolved, That the Speaker propound to the witness at the bar the following questions:

"First. Give the names of the persons whom you employed to aid you in procuring the subsidy from Congress in 1872 for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

"Second. What was the largest sum paid by you to any one person to aid you in procuring that subsidy?"

And that upon and after the adoption of said last-mentioned order by the said House, to wit, on said 6th day of January, 1875, and while the said House was in session and the said Richard B. Irwin was so present at the bar thereof in pursuance of the action of said House in causing him to be brought before the bar of said House to show cause as aforesaid, the Speaker of said House propounded to him, the said Richard B. Irwin, the interrogatories in said last-mentioned order contained; and the said Richard B. Irwin then and there refused to answer the first interrogatory contained in said last-mentioned order; and that the said House, after having heard and considered the causes then and there showed by said Richard B. Irwin why he should not be punished for contempt of the authority of said House, and after the said Richard B. Irwin had refused to answer said first-named interrogatory in said last-mentioned order contained, to wit, on said 6th day of January, 1875, and after he had refused to answer the same before said committee, as aforesaid, adopted in the premises aforesaid the order following, that is to say:

"Resolved, That Richard B. Irwin, having been heard by the House of Representatives pursuant to an order heretofore made requiring him to show cause why he should not answer the questions propounded to him by the committee and by the Speaker of this House in obedience to its order, has failed to show cause why he should not answer the same; and that said Richard B. Irwin be considered in contempt of the House for failure to make answer thereto."

And that the said House of Representatives afterward, on the said 6th day of January, 1875, and while said House was still in session and in the exercise of its constitutional and lawful powers as the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, and in execution of the order and judgment of said House declaring "that said Richard B. Irwin be considered in contempt of the House for failure to make answer," passed the following, that is to say:

"Resolved, That Richard B. Irwin be remanded to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms to abide the further order of this House, and while in such custody he be permitted to be taken by the said Sergeant-at-Arms before the Committee on Ways and Means if he should declare himself ready to answer such questions as may be lawfully put to him, including those asked of him by order of this House; and while he shall so remain in custody the Sergeant-at-Arms shall keep the witness in his custody in the common jail of the District of Columbia."

And that afterward, to wit, upon the same 6th day of January, 1875, in pursuance and execution of the order contained in the resolution last aforesaid, and in virtue of the authority and power thereby conferred, and of all the premises aforesaid, JAMES G. BLAINE, he the said JAMES G. BLAINE then and there being the Speaker of the said House of Representatives, executed, and Edward McPherson, he the said Edward McPherson then and there being the Clerk of said House, attested, the warrant of said Speaker, under the seal of said House, and prior to the arrest and detention of the said Richard B. Irwin delivered the said warrant to this respondent, as Sergeant-at-Arms of the said House, and that in obedience to the warrant aforesaid and the order and command of the House of Representatives of the United States of America, duly and lawfully made in open session of said House, this respondent, as Sergeant-at-Arms as aforesaid and as in duty bound to do, did, on said 6th day of January, 1875, arrest and now holds the body of the said Richard B. Irwin in custody, and now here produces and exhibits the said warrant, precept, and order as the cause of the caption and detention by him, as aforesaid, of the body of the said Richard B. Irwin, as part of this respondent's return.

And this respondent herewith also submits a duly certified copy of the order of the same House, made on the said 21st day of December, 1874, hereinbefore referred to, with a duly certified copy of that warrant of the Speaker of the said House issued there, as also duly certified copies of the resolutions of said House issued on the 6th day of January, 1875, hereinbefore referred to.

Whereupon this respondent, protesting that upon the facts disclosed by the return now made, showing that the relator is lawfully held by this respondent as Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, in pursuance and execution of the order of said House, duly adjudging the relator to be in contempt of the authority of said House, the issuance of said writ was improvident and in derogation of the privileges of said House of Representatives; and that the fact of said caption and detention under the authority of said House, as aforesaid, being conclusively established by the certified records of said House, no further proceeding or interference with the custody of the relator by this respondent can be lawfully had under the said writ of habeas corpus, and asks that the relator may be remanded to the custody of this respondent as Sergeant-at-Arms, as aforesaid.

Sergeant-at-Arms House of Representatives, United States of America.

The COURT. Well, Mr. Durant, what have you to say?

Mr. DURANT. I have just asked the gentlemen if that was all they were going to read.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Yes, sir; that is all.

Judge FISHER. Is not that enough?

Mr. DURANT. No, sir; not quite. I call the attention of the court to section 760 of the Revised Statutes, which reads in these words:

"The petitioner, or the party imprisoned or restrained, may deny any of the facts set forth in the return, or may allege any other facts that may be material in the case; such denials or allegations shall be under oath."

And availing myself of that provision of law, I respectfully beg leave to read to your honor the following statement, which is sworn to by the prisoner.

Mr. Durant then read as follows:

"In the honorable the supreme court of the District of Columbia:

"Richard B. Irwin——

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Just wait one moment, if you please. I wish to suggest to your honor that upon the disclosures that are contained in the return, including the record of the House of Representatives, that the case has now at least reached that stage indicated by the authorities that were read to your honor yesterday, where the court is apprised of the fact that the relator is in the custody of the House of Representatives, and that that custody, being disclosed now by the competent proofs, is one that cannot and will not be further inquired into or assailed. Those records, like all others, purport absolute verity, and when properly authenticated prove themselves, and that as a result of this we have now reached that stage of the case where the law laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of Booth, and afterward reaffirmed in the case of 13 Wallace, has its application, and where, in the language of the Supreme Court, the judge issuing the writ of habeas corpus or the court will go no further. I do not wish to argue the question, but simply to call the attention of your honor to that claim now made in the case.

The COURT. What do you wish? To present the plea such as was indicated or contemplated by the section of the Revised Statutes you have just read?

Mr. DURANT. Precisely that, and nothing else.

The COURT. I think you are right in that respect, as prescribed by the law. I shall therefore not interrupt the proceedings at present until I have presented to me the entire record in the case.

Mr. Durant then read as follows:

In the honorable the supreme court of the District of Columbia, Richard B. Irwin, praying for a writ of habeas corpus.

The petitioner, Richard B. Irwin, now availing himself of the right accorded to him by the laws of the United States, says that the return to the writ of habeas corpus is bad in law, showing no ground sufficient to keep him longer restrained of his liberty; and further petitioner says that on the 6th day of January, 1875, at the time the House of Representatives ordered the Speaker to issue his warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms to take the petitioner into custody, he, the Speaker, informed the House he desired to call their attention to what he deemed to be his duty under the law, which he, the Speaker, said, made it his duty to certify the facts of the case under the seal of the House to the district attorney of the District of Columbia, to the end that petitioner might in due course of law be presented to the grand jury and the case submitted for their action; and the Speaker then and there said that unless otherwise ordered by the House he should proceed as he had indicated; but the House gave no further order and took no further action in the premises, all of which will appear by reference to the proceedings of the House of Representatives as published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 7, 1875, a printed copy of which petitioner files herewith, and marks the same exhibit R. B. I. No. 1, specially referring to pages 29 and 21.

And the petitioner further says that the Speaker of the House, as he is informed and believes, and as he now states to the court, has certified the facts under the seal of the House of Representatives to the district attorney, to the end that the proceedings may be had according to law.

Your petitioner is advised that this action of the Speaker of the House exhausts the whole legal power of that body over him, petitioner, and that he can legally be held for no other purpose than such as the prosecuting officers of the United States, the district attorney and the grand jury, may institute; all of which he is ready to respond to; that by the Constitution and law of the land he is entitled to give bail and thereupon to be released from custody; and he prays that your honor may order his release and give such other or further order in the premises as to law and practice may appertain.

RICHARD B. IRWIN.

Richard B. Irwin being duly sworn says that the facts and allegations of the foregoing statement are true.

THOMAS J. DURANT,
Of Counsel.

[Exhibit R. B. I. No. 1.]

Proceedings of the House of Representatives of January 7, 1875.

"Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS, after a brief argument, said:

"Thus the power of the House cannot be denied, nor in this case can the necessity for action be denied. Therefore the passage of a resolution substantially such as the committee has reported is absolutely required by the circumstances. I am directed, however, by the Committee on Ways and Means to withdraw the particular form of resolution which has been reported, and to submit that which I now send to the Clerk's desk; and upon it I call the previous question.

"The Clerk read as follows:

"'Resolved, That Richard B. Irwin be remitted to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms to abide the further order of this House; and that while in such custody he be permitted to be taken by the said Sergeant-at-Arms before the Committee on Ways and Means, if he shall declare himself ready to answer such questions as may be lawfully put to him, including those asked of him by order of this House; and while he shall so remain in custody the Sergeant-at-Arms shall keep the witness in his custody in the common jail of the District of Columbia.'

"Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the gentleman will allow me to move to amend by striking out the words 'in the common jail of the District of Columbia.'

"Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I cannot yield for that purpose.

"Mr. MAYNARD. Then I will ask the Chair whether, if the previous question should not be seconded, the amendment I suggest would be in order?

"The SPEAKER. Of course it would be.

"The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution of Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS was adopted.

"Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

"The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to a point which affects his own duty in this matter. The Clerk will read the third section of the act relating to cases of this kind.

"The Clerk read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That when a witness shall fail to testify, as provided in the previous sections of this act, and the fact shall be reported to the House, it shall be the duty of the Speaker of the House or the President of the Senate to certify the fact, under the seal of the House or Senate, to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action.'

"The SPEAKER. The question in the mind of the Chair is whether this witness having refused to testify and having been brought before the House, the time has arrived for the action of the Chair under this statute, which seems to be mandatory. On this point the Chair will follow the instructions of the House.

"Mr. DAWES. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that possibly something may occur which will obviate the necessity for that step; and as it is not peremptory that it shall be done forthwith, the Speaker might wait a little while to see whether such action will be necessary.

"Mr. LAWRENCE. The act imposes the duty on the Speaker; there is no doubt about that.

"Mr. DAWES. Certainly. It is a duty under the law.

"Mr. LAWRENCE. And there is no escape from it.

"The SPEAKER. The statute appears to be mandatory in imposing this duty. In the case of Joseph B. Stewart two years ago it was not performed, and there was some criticism in consequence. The attention of the Chair was not called to the precise language of the statute in that case until some time afterward.

"Mr. DAWES. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, the meaning of the statute is that this certification shall be made if there should be a final refusal. But we have provided a further opportunity for this witness to answer. Therefore I suggest to the Chair that though when the proceedings are complete the duty provided by law will be incumbent upon the Chair if the refusal be persisted in, yet it does not seem to me necessary that this action be taken by the Speaker forthwith to-day.

"Mr. GARFIELD. Will the Chair allow me to make a remark? If the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] should prevail, the Chair will have to wait until the 4th of March, at noon, to determine whether the proceedings will be finished or not, so as to require the performance of this duty; and when the gavel comes down at that time, you, sir, will cease to be Speaker, and cannot possibly perform this magisterial duty which the statute imposes; so that the suggestion of the gentlemen from Massachusetts would make the statute null so far as the duty of the Speaker is concerned. Having committed the offender to jail, it seems to me we ought now to proceed to determine by some process whether we have any right to put him there.

"Mr. G. F. HOAR. As I understand, a witness who refuses to testify in answer to a lawful question put to him by authority of this House is in precisely the same position as a man who should come within these doors and strike a blow at the Speaker or any member of this House during its session. First, he commits a contempt of the House; but besides he commits a penal offense under a statute of the United States. Under the statute, when that penal offense has been reported to the House, it becomes the duty of the Speaker to certify the fact to the district attorney. That offense has been reported to the House in this case by the committee, and it has been found as a fact by the resolution adopted by the House that such an offense has been committed.

"Now, whatever the witness may do hereafter to purge himself of contempt or to mitigate the punishment which should be inflicted upon him by the House, his offense in disobeying this statute was complete when he refused to answer lawful questions; and when that fact has been reported to the House and affirmed by the House to exist, the duty of the Speaker has become imperative.

"Mr. KASSON. Allow me a single additional suggestion. This case under the statute, as I understand, must go before a grand jury in the District of Columbia. There may be such a body in session at the moment the offense is committed; but if we postpone action, then before any process could be issued upon which the party could be arrested he might be out of the reach of such process; he might be in Europe. Consequently I apprehend the intention of the law to be that as soon as the offense is committed this communication is to be sent to the officer having charge of such prosecutions in the District of Columbia, that proceedings may be instituted at the earliest possible moment, and then it may be reported to the House that process for him has been issued, and he may be discharged or not by the House. At the conclusion of our authority on the 4th of March he is still subject to that process wherever it may find him.

"Mr. LAWRENCE. The grand jury is now in session.

"Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I agree in the main with all that has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR.] I think, however, he has overlooked one point. The House has already taken action with reference to this question. It has determined that this witness shall be held in custody until he shall purge himself of this contempt. Now, it has become the duty of the Speaker under statute to certify this case to the district attorney. Now, the district attorney will find it to be his duty to proceed at once and have the case presented to the grand jury. But the court cannot get control of this case, or at least the body of this witness as a defendant, until the House is through with him. He is all the time in the charge and custody of the House; and although the Speaker does the duty which is required of him by the law, that does not in any sense take the case away from the House of Representatives. This is a distinct offense, and he is to be punished by the law of the land, as any man is to be punished who commits a crime. Therefore I differ from the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR,] who, when the duty of the Speaker to certify the case to the courts has been carried out, would then seem to imply the case would be taken away from the control of the House of Representatives.

"Mr. G. F. HOAR. Not in the least.

"Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The gentleman from Iowa said so then.

"Mr. KASSON. Not at all; but, on the contrary, the 4th of March, if not before.

"Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Now, then, the grand jury cannot act on this case for a considerable time—cannot act on it until after that time; but it is the duty of the district attorney to bring it promptly before that grand jury, so he may be indicted and turned over to the courts when Congress is compelled to give him up, if before that time he has not purged himself of the contempt committed before the House of Representatives. Therefore I say there is nothing inconsistent at all in the Speaker certifying this case up to the district attorney—nothing inconsistent with the action of the House to-day. They are not in conflict at all.

"Mr. MAYNARD. It seems to me this law is as plain as one can make it. It provides that any witness who shall fail to testify as provided in previous sections of the act and that fact is reported to the House, it shall be the duty of the Speaker of the House to certify, &c. Here the facts have not only been certified to the House, but it appears in the presence of the House itself that this witness does refuse to answer; and therefore the case contemplated in the third section of the act is made out, and the duty of the Speaker under the law is beyond his discretion and is mandatory.

"The SPEAKER. The Chair has brought the matter to the attention of the House simply for the reason that in previous cases it may have been overlooked or neglected. As he reads the statute, the duty seems to be mandatory upon him officially; and unless otherwise instructed by the House he will perform it.

"Mr. GARFIELD. I move the House adjourn.

"Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Before the motion to adjourn is put, let me say that the duty of the Speaker cannot be such as to interfere with the bringing of this man before the Committee on Ways and Means as a witness.

"The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand it.

"Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The point I made awhile ago was that the performance of that duty by the Speaker can in no way interfere with the action of the House hereafter. Although the witness may be indicted in a court in the District of Columbia, there would be no power on the part of any such court to take him out of the custody and control of the House of Representatives.

"The SPEAKER. The Chair merely desires to repeat, that according to his reading of the statute his duty is plain. Should the House think otherwise, he would of course be governed by the expression of the House, if they made any such expression; but in absence of any such expression, the Chair will feel it to be his duty to certify the case up.

"And then, on motion of Mr. GARFIELD, (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned."

Mr. Durant, at the conclusion of the reading, said:

The seven hundred and sixtieth section says:

"The petitioner, or the party imprisoned or restrained, may deny any of the facts set forth in the return, or may allege any other facts that may be material to the case. Such denials or allegations shall be under oath, by return, and all suggestions made against it may be amended by leave of the court, or the justice or judge before whom made, before or after the same are filed, so that thereby the material facts may be ascertained."

Upon filing this, I ask that I may be permitted in some proper manner, by affidavit or otherwise, or by formal admission from the representative of the United States here, (if he be inclined to make such, which I presume he will not be disinclined to, as that it is either true or untrue, as I have stated in the petition,) that the facts have been certified to him by the Speaker of the House of Representatives in accordance with the terms of the law, and what is declared to be his duty under the law, in the paper I have filed. I do not read that portion of the paper, may it please your honor, because I presume that as the facts have been published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and are familiar to the counsel on the other side, they will not be denied. If there is any doubt about them, or any doubt is intimated, I will read them.

Judge FISHER. What facts do you allude to?

Mr. DURANT. That the Speaker declared to the House that he considered it his duty to certify the matter under the seal of the House to the district attorney. I say those facts appear on the face of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The other fact, may it please your honor, does not appear, and I must substantiate it in some legal way.

The COURT. The certification?

Mr. DURANT. The fact that the Speaker did so certify the proceedings to the district attorney that have been placed in his possession.

The COURT. If you offer proof on that point, it will raise the legal question involved in your reply, whether that is any defense to this return or not.

Mr. DURANT. Of course. It is my desire, and I have no doubt it is participated in by the counsel who represent, respectively, the Government and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, that the matter shall be fully understood. It was for that reason that I stated in the fullest terms that I was able my understanding of the case, to embrace at the time all that I knew of the facts in the petition, so that the court or judge to whom I applied might not act improvidently, so far as to be left uninformed of any fact that I knew.

Judge FISHER. We insist, may it please your honor, upon our original motion here, that having made and exhibited to the court by our return that the prisoner is lawfully held in custody in execution of a judgment lawfully pronounced by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, your honor having been certified of that fact, in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, to which this court is amenable, your honor can take no further step, except to remit the custody of the relator to the respondent. We do not feel authorized to make any admissions, therefore, in regard to the subject-matter.

The COURT. Then, Mr. Durant, you will have to offer proof in regard to the matter. It will bring the case then within what you contend is the operation of the statute.

Mr. DURANT. Yes, sir. I am not prepared at this moment to do so, because I see no one present who is cognizant of those facts except the district attorney himself or some gentleman in his office, who might not possibly be compelled to disclose them, and suggest, as a matter of delicacy on my part, that I would not like to compel a gentleman in the office of the district attorney to prove the fact.

The COURT. I can dispose of the legal question involved.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. We will say this to the counsel and your honor, that as a matter of convenience we have no objection to the proofs being made by Mr. Durant at any time and to let the case proceed as if the proofs were made.

Mr. DURANT. I think that I am fully justified in asking the district attorney at once—for I understand that he does not appear here now as district attorney, though he holds that honorable position, but he appears as counsel of Mr. Ordway—whether he has not those papers in his possession; whether they have not been certified to him; and ask your honor to order him to produce them. I make that motion.

The COURT. You can ask him to take the stand here.

Mr. DURANT. I mean that, of course.

Judge FISHER. May it please your honor, I think I may be justified in saying that about a week ago I received—because it is a matter of public notoriety—those certificates that my learned friend speaks of; but at the same time we insist upon contending that your honor can proceed no further after you have become judicially apprised of the fact——

The COURT. I understand your position on that point. I do not intend at this moment, of course, to decide upon the effect of that statute on the power of the House, after the case has been certified. I shall not do that without hearing counsel; but I think it must be very evident, if the assumption is true, that that statute has exhausted the power of the House in matters of contempt within the meaning of the statute; that is, in the cases of recusant witnesses. However, in this particular case I am not disposed to go behind it, as I said before. There is no fact on this return which is denied by the replication.

Judge FISHER. How?

The COURT. There is no point in your return denied by the replication, and the only question presented on this new matter is whether the House could proceed any further after the case was certified to the district attorney.

Mr. DURANT. That is precisely the position I desire to take. I desire to know, for the sake of precaution, in what way it will appear upon the record—the statement that has been made by Mr. Fisher—because this case may go to the general term, and may possibly go still further, and that fact——

Judge FISHER. I will gratify your desire in that respect. I will have those certificates copied and they may be filed with the papers.

Mr. DURANT. Very well. Then the case is ready for argument, I understand now; but I will ask your honor whether it is to be gone on with to-day, or whether you would prefer to have it on another day. The hour is now late—I mean late with regard to the usual hour of adjournment of the court. Of course there is no possibility of concluding an argument of this sort within the time at which the court usually adjourns. And although of course I am anxious, as it is my duty, to have the matter disposed of as speedily as possible by the judge of this court one way or the other, still there is no need of that precipitate haste which would prevent us from arguing it deliberately. I am prepared to go on to-day; only, if that be the order of the court, I will ask your honor to delay the matter a little until I can send to the office and get my books. The office is but a short distance from here.

Judge FISHER. We desire, may it please your honor, that the argument may be proceeded with to-day. I would like to inquire, while I am on my feet, whether your honor will permit the argument of any other question than simply the one presented by this demurrer, as to whether the power of the House of Representatives has been exhausted by virtue of the act of Congress of the 24th of January, 1857, and by its certification by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, under that act, to the district attorney of the fact of the contumacy of the witness?

Mr. DURANT. But I must remind by honorable friend that Mr. Irwin is the prisoner, and not I.

Judge FISHER. I beg your pardon.

Mr. DURANT. I am not to be limited in the scope of my debate. I suppose my tongue is not to be tied.

Judge FISHER. But I want to know whether your honor——

Mr. DURANT. I shall claim "as large a charter as the wind, to blow on whom I please."

Judge FISHER. That is exactly what I wanted to know.

Mr. DURANT. Whenever I say anything that is improper, his honor will stop me.

The COURT. I do not think the occasion will occur.

Mr. DURANT. I hope not; I shall endeavor to avoid it. Then I will send for my books.

The COURT. If, however, you intend to argue the case at large, I think we could scarcely get through to-day.

Mr. DURANT. We cannot certainly get through by the usual hour of adjournment.

Judge FISHER. You can get through with your argument.

Mr. DURANT. We cannot dispose of the great principles of liberty in thirty minutes.

Judge FISHER. I will say to your honor that I have a telegram which calls me away from here to-day, and I have apologized for my not responding to it by reason of the pendency of this case. I have promised, however, to do so on Monday, so that I would like, for my part, that this argument should be concluded by Monday at noon; at least so far as I am concerned.

The COURT. I will resume the case, then, if it will accomodate counsel, at ten o'clock on Monday morning.

Judge FISHER. I have telegraphed that I would leave here on Monday morning; made arrangements to that effect. I supposed that the case would be through with by twelve o'clock at any rate on Monday, as far as I was concerned.

The COURT. I am not disposed to go on with this case to-day. I have been very hard at work all the week in this and other matters, and I think we had better renew this subject with a fresh week. I should like to have this morning disposed of the matter, or at least to have had it disposed of before the hour of adjournment; but as that seems impossible, I will adjourn the further consideration of this case until Monday morning at ten o'clock.

Now, regarding another matter. Considerable has been said about the custody of the relator here. I would not like to have that matter left with any misunderstanding before the adjournment as to the custody of the relator.

Mr. DURANT. He is in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The COURT. If you regard it in that light, that is satisfactory.

Mr. DURANT. That is satisfactory to us.

The court thereupon adjourned until Monday morning at ten o'clock.

Fourth Day's Proceedings.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 18, 1875.

The hearing in the matter of the application for a writ of habeas corpus, in the case of R. B. Irwin, was resumed at ten o'clock.

The COURT. In what order, gentlemen, do you desire this argument to be presented?

Mr. DURANT. I supposed, although I am ready to submit myself to the direction of the court, the opening and close lay with me.

The COURT. If there is no objection, I will hear you first, then. You can go on.

Mr. DURANT. May it please your honor, in every case where in our country the life and liberty or the property of a citizen is subjected to the action of governmental authority, the mind immediately addresses itself to the question whether that authority be authorized by positive institution, by the provisions of constitutional law and the acts of legislative authority flowing from it, or whether it emanates from an independent exercise of authority, claimed to be superior to the Constitution and laws, and existing in some vague, uncertain, and indefinite custom and claim of authority on the part of the particular department of Government that exercises control over the individual in question. And accordingly, as we take the monarchical and European view of government or the American and republican, we incline to the one side or the other of this question; for in Europe, and under the monarchical forms, the rights and privileges of the people are not inherent and inalienable, but flow from the grant and transmission of the government itself, whereas in our country the right of the individual is superior to the institution, and all government and all power flow from the sovereign authority of the people, and none other, no matter what department of the Government it may be, whether high or low, legislative or judicial, none other power exists than flows from their will and is expressed in their written Constitution. Therefore, if I were examining this question as a citizen and not as a lawyer, I should take quite a different view of the case than that which I am about to present. Yet it is well for us to look at the view in which we are bound to contemplate this case as citizens, because those who judge us and those who legislate for us are citizens, and are, after the exercise of their power, to return to the mass of their fellow-citizens to be governed by the same laws that they themselves have enacted, or to be controlled by the same decisions which, in judicial functions, they themselves have made.

By way of illustration, therefore, merely as introductory, and not as settling the law in this case, I quote from the opinion of the greatest publicist, in my judgment, that America has ever produced—the one who, far beyond all others, has laid down a distinctive line of demarkation between the powers of government and the rights of the citizen. I quote from a note of Story on the Constitution, second volume, from the pen of Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. Durant then read as follows:

"That Congress have no such natural or necessary power"—

That is, of imprisonment for contempt—for he is commenting on the case of Duane, who, being charged with a libel published in his paper, the Aurora, was brought before the bar of the Senate of the United States and consigned to imprisonment as for a contempt; a power which I suppose it will be claimed by the learned counsel on the other side still exists in either House of Congress.

"That Congress have no such natural or necessary power, or any powers, but such as are given by the Constitution; that was given them directly, exemption from personal arrest, exemption from question elsewhere for what is said in their House; a power over their own members and proceedings. For this no further law is necessary, the Constitution being the law."

Those provisions being contained in the Constitution itself—

"That moreover, by that article of the Constitution which authorizes them to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers vested in them by the Constitution, they may provide by law for an undisturbed exercise of their functions; for example, for the punishment of contempts, of affrays and tumult in their presence, &c.; but until the law be made, it does not exist, and does not exist from their own neglect; that in the mean time, however, they are not unprotected, the ordinary magistrates' courts of law being open, and competent to punish all unjustifiable disturbances or defamations; and even their own sergeant, who may appoint deputies ad libitum to aid him, is equal to a small disturbance; that in requiring a previous law, the Constitution had regard to the inviolability of the citizen as well as of the member; and should one House in the regular form of a bill, aim at too broad privileges, it may be changed by the other, and both by the President; and also, as the law is being promulgated, the citizen will know how to avoid offense. But if one branch may assume its own privileges without control; if it may do it on the spur of the occasion; conceal the law in its own breast, and after the fact committed make its sentence, both of the law and the judgment on that fact; if the offense is to be kept undefined, to be ex re nata, and according to the passions of the moment, and there be no limitation there in the manner or the measure of the punishment, the condition of the citizen will be perilous indeed."

Now, may it please your honor, although that view has not in its entirety been sanctioned by the adjudication of the Supreme Court of the United States, which I shall have occasion to allude to in the course of this discussion, yet, it is the exposition of what the law should be, of the view of one of the most distinguished citizens, who aided in the formation of the Government, as to what it should be at a time when probably the ideas of individual freedom and the powers of Government were as well defined, were as well understood as they are at the present moment. I say, therefore, may it please your honor, that we must look now exactly at the scope which is claimed by the counsel on the other side for the power of the House of Representatives in this particular case. The prisoner at the bar stands before you, committed by the House of Representatives for failure to answer certain questions propounded to him by the order of the House, through the mouth of the Speaker, at their bar, because, as he avers, the House had no authority to propound such questions, and he has been committed to the common jail of the District, under the charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, there to remain for a space of time not determined; whether it is to be longer or shorter, the order or warrant directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms does not by limiting any particular time specially state. The counsel who represent the Sergeant-at-Arms here, lay down, as I understand them, this proposition of law, that by the custom of the House of Representatives; by a power inherent in that body; by what may be properly termed, I presume, the lex parliamentaria, which they declare exists in this country, the House of Representatives have a discretionary power to punish for what they consider a contempt, and they have even gone so far as to say—though I presume that exaggerated feature of the argument will not be insisted upon to-day—that the House is the exclusive judge of what is a contempt, and when it has settled that point, by the adjudication, by the warrant of the Speaker, ordering the commitment, that all inquiry into this matter is closed, and that the judicial tribunals have no further authority.

Now, in order to arrive at a correct conclusion of what, in a legal point of view, in the view of the decisions of tribunals that have been made on this subject, is the law of the land at present, we must look in the first instance to that country from which these authorities have flowed down to us by tradition. In Great Britain, from which we derive this idea of the lex parliamentaria, a frame of government exists which I need scarcely say is essentially different from our own. The executive power there is sovereign and hereditary. There church and state are joined. The Queen or the King is at the head of the church. There one of the houses of the legislature, the House of Lords, is a hereditary legislature, born, and not booted and spurred, to ride over their fellow-creatures; born and vested with the power of legislating and discretion and judgment to make the laws for the people; and by the theory of that government the House of Lords is the supreme court—is the supreme court, judicially, of judicature in the kingdom, to which as a court of final resort all causes may in the end go. And the House of Commons is constituted, I need not say, on very different principles from our House of Representatives. So that in Great Britain, far from acting under a written constitution and by fixed rules of government previously laid down, as is the case with the legislative department and all departments of our Government under the Constitution of the United States, it is a maxim in Great Britain that the power of Parliament is omnipotent, and that no law that is passed by the Parliament of Great Britain can be questioned by the judicial tribunals. The very opposite of the system that prevails with us; for here, every law that is passed by Congress, after it shall have received the sanction of the President of the United States, may not only be questioned, but it is the duty of the judicial tribunals to set it aside as a law operating upon a citizen, if he finds it conflicts with the supreme law of the land; for that instrument lays it down in express terms that the Constitution and the treaties and laws of Congress made in pursuance of it shall be the supreme law of the land. Yet we are told here that there is a law of this land superior to the Constitution and superior to the laws, and that although this tribunal has the undoubted authority to question the validity of any act of Congress after it shall have received all the sanctions of legislation, and set it aside if it be found inconsistent with the Constitution, yet this court has not the power to go behind the order of one of the branches of Congress to see whether it conflicts with the constitutional rights and privileges granted under that instrument to the citizen or not! Such is the theory held by the gentlemen on the other side. I repeat again, that although it is admitted and cannot be denied that any court of justice will strike with nullity any act of Congress as being in violation of the Constitution, yet no court of justice can go behind an order of one of the branches of Congress when that branch shall say we are now deciding upon our own privileges; we are now deciding upon the rights we have over the liberty or the property of the citizen! If this be true, let us see to what extent it goes. I said I would show to what extent it goes in Great Britain, and I will quote some authorities on that point to show the scope of the authority which I have adverted to in the House of Commons in Great Britain. I will read a simple statement from a case that I have already quoted to your honor, that of Regina against Paty, in the second volume of Lord Raymond, page 1105. This was in the third year of the reign of Anne.

I cite this to your honor in order to draw the mind of the court to the inference I draw, to the extent of the privileges of our parliament or House of Representatives. After the Chief Justice had said that this was the first occasion, as far as his knowledge extended, in which the habeas corpus had ever been issued for one imprisoned by order of the House of Commons, he proceeds to say:

"We cannot judge of the privileges of the House of Commons, but they are to debate them among themselves. He said it was objected that by Magna Charta, chapter 29, no man ought to be taken or imprisoned but by the law of the land;" from which we derive our constitutional provision that no man shall be deprived of liberty or property except by due process of law. But the answer to this was that there were several laws in this kingdom"—

This is the ingenious way in which judges pandered to the prerogatives of parliament at this time:

"But the answer to this was that there were several laws in this kingdom, among which was the lex parliamenti, which law, as it is stated in the 4th Institutes, 15, Ad omnibus est quæranda a multus ignorata a paucis cognita"—

Which ought to be sought for by all, and which is unknown to almost everybody, and very few know anything about it, if I understand the Latin—

"And that it was uncertain that these words in the statute Magna Charta were to be restrained to the common law. He said that Parliament had laws and customs peculiar to itself, and that this was declared to be secundum legem parliamenti, and that the judges ought not to give any answer to questions propounded to them about matters of privilege, because privileges of Parliament are not to be determined by the common law."

Now, may it please your honor, if the privileges of Parliament are not to be determined by the common law of Great Britain, and therefore the great principles of Magna Charta protecting the liberties of the citizen were entirely overridden by the parliamentary law, how is it in this country, and what power is there within the limits of the United States which has any authority within our form of government not expressly delegated to it by the Constitution of the United States, or necessary to carry out the powers expressly delegated? Certainly we have no law here in this District superior to the Constitution of the United States, the treaties and the laws made pursuant to the Constitution, and the common law of England. Those laws we are governed by here, and certainly we are governed by no other. But in the space of a century the rights and privileges of British subjects began to be more thoroughly understood, and you will find that in the space of that time there was a very wide departure from the subserviency to the privileges, so called, of Parliament or the House of Commons, as laid down by Justice Gould in that decision; in proof of which I will quote some brief extracts from the case of Stockdale vs. Hansard, 9 Adolphus and Ellis, 36 Common Law Reports, 68, 83.

The COURT. Ninth Adolphus & Ellis?

Mr. DURANT. Yes, sir, it is the very first case in 9 Adolphus & Ellis.

The COURT. The celebrated case in which Lord Denman pronounced the judgment, I suppose?

Mr. DURANT. The House of Commons claimed as a privilege they should print and sell their own debates, and under the theory that was advocated by some and strenuously insisted upon by the attorney-general of England at that time, whenever a branch of Parliament laid down that such a thing was their privilege, that was the end of the matter, which is the theory, I understand, of the counsel for the respondent in this case. Whenever the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States shall say "This is our privilege, to punish you for violating it," the power of the court is at an end; and such was the intimation of the law by Justice Gould in the case I have read from Lord Raymond. Here is what Lord Raymond says. I will read now from page 65:

"Parliament is said to be supreme; I most fully acknowledge its supremacy. It follows, then, as before observed, that neither branch of it is supreme when acting by itself."

Parliament is supreme, but neither branch of it is supreme when acting by itself, and under the Constitution of the United States the Congress is supreme, but by the same reasoning neither branch of it is supreme when acting by itself; and that irresistible influence, may it please your honor, at once puts to flight the idea that the decision of the House itself is conclusive as to its own rights and powers. That at once puts to flight the idea that there is any power in this Government which is purely arbitrary, and whose actions cannot be inquired into by the judicial tribunal.

"It is also said that the privilege of each House is the privilege of the whole Parliament. In one sense I agree to this; because whatever impedes the proper action of either impedes those functions which are necessary for the performance of their joint duties. All the essential parts of a machine must be in order before it can work at all. But it by no means follows that the opinion that either House may entertain of the extent of its own privileges is correct; that all its declarations of them are binding. In the course of the argument the privileges of the Commons were said to belong to them for their protection against the encroachment by the Lords. The fact of an attempt at encroachment may then be imagined; we must also suppose that the Commons would resist it. In such a case the claim set up by the two Houses, being inconsistent, both could not be well founded, and an instance would occur of adverse opinions or declarations, while the real privilege, whenever it is ascertained, would certainly be the inherent right of Parliament itself."

At the foot of page 83 of the same volume I read this language:

"In truth, no practical difference can be drawn between the right to sanction all things under the name of 'privilege' and the right to sanction all things whatever by merely ordering them to be done. The second proposition differs from the first in words only. In both cases the law would be superseded by one assembly, and however dignified and respectable that body, in whatever degree superior to all temptation of abusing their power, the power claimed is arbitrary and irresponsible, in itself the most monstrous and intolerable of all abuses.

"Before I finally take leave of this head of the argument, I will dispose of the notion that the House of Commons is a separate court, having exclusive jurisdiction over the subject-matter, on which, for that reason, its adjudication must be final."

When I read these decisions, may it please your honor, I wish to refer again to the profound conviction I have that anything that is said by the courts of Great Britain to abbreviate or curtail the supposed privileges of the houses of Parliament is infinitely stronger when it comes here, from the different nature of the powers of our judiciary when compared with the judiciary establishment of Great Britain, where they are bound by the laws of Parliament as being omnipotent, whereas we are not bound by the acts of Congress unless they are constitutional.

"The argument places the house herein on a level with the spiritual court and the court of admiralty. Adopting this analogy, it appears to me to destroy the defense attempted to the present action. Where the subject-matter falls within their jurisdiction, no doubt, we cannot question their judgment; but we are now inquiring whether the subject-matter does fall within the jurisdiction of the House of Commons. It is contended that they can bring it within their jurisdiction by declaring it so. To this claim, as arising from their privileges, I have already stated my answer. It is perfectly clear that none of these courts could give this jurisdiction by judging that they enjoy it."

So that I hold the matter in England is conclusive, and still more conclusive is the argument here, that the jurisdiction of the House of Representatives to give this order in the shape they did is a matter we can inquire into, and it is a matter entirely under the control of this court; that it is a judicial question in its very essence, and one which the courts of the country must finally determine. Still more strongly is it so, I repeat again, under the dominion of our Constitution than under the theory of the constitution of Great Britain. Now, in the case of the Sheriff of Middlesex, 39 Common Law Reports, 86, there are some other emphatic declarations. (11 Adolphus & Ellis, 272.)

Lord DENMAN, C. J., said:

"I think it necessary to declare that the judgment delivered by this court last Trinity term, in the case of Stockdale vs. Hansard, (which is one just read from 9 Adolphus & Ellis,) appears to me in all respects correct.

"The court decided there that there was no power in the country above being questioned by the law."

Lord Denman entertained very different ideas of the rights of British subjects than those put forth by the learned counsel for the House of Representatives in this case in the early part of the debate.

He considered that there was no power in the country above being questioned by the law, even the power of the sovereign, of Parliament, or either house of Parliament.

"The House of Commons there attempted to place its privilege on the footing of an unquestionable and unlimited power. It was argued against that claim that the dicta of the learned judge by which it was supported had in many cases been hastily thrown out, and were encountered by others of a contrary tendency from judges not less eminent, and by precedent. I endeavored to establish that the claim advanced in that case tended to a despotic power which could not be recognized to exist in this country, and that the privilege of publication as there asserted had no legal foundation. To all these positions I, on further consideration, adhere; all of them I believe in my conscience to be true. If this were not so, it is strange that the case should not have been brought before the other ten judges by writ of error."

Therefore, may it please your honor, not only was the law of Great Britain such as I have pointed it out, but it has been reiterated in that and other decisions, and the authority certainly is the fixed law of the land there. It is from that country, therefore, may it please your honor, that we derive the idea that there is over and above the constitutional laws of the land a lex parlimentaria here by which the House of Representatives or the Senate may judge of what is a contempt of their authority and proceed to punish it. And I must confess that there is a single decision going to that effect, and that single decision I am not about to call upon this court in the slightest degree to depart from. It would not be proper in me, in the first instance, nor would I suppose your honor would conceive yourself in any degree authorized to depart from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

In 1821 a very worthy old gentleman from Michigan, who had fought in the service of his country and had been wounded, and lost all his property by the British invasion of the northern part of that State, came to advocate his claim to compensation here before Congresss, and was finally successful in having an award made to him of some $9,000 or so. He considered that the chairman of the Committee on Claims had been exceedingly kind to him; that he had done far more than was his ordinary duty as a member of Congress and chairman of the committee. The old man in the goodness of his heart, simply, and without having the slightest idea that he was doing anything wrong, after he had been paid the money, and never having made a hint of the kind before, said to the chairman of the committee, "I wish you would accept $500 for the trouble you have had in this case." The chairman, taking the matter in an entirely improper view, brought the matter before the House as a breach of privilege, and the old gentleman was sent for, and he was brought here and arraigned before the House and he was punished. In the mean time he brought an action of trespass against the Sergeant-at-Arms, and the cause went up from this court to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is reported in 6 Wheaton, which I hold in my hand, and I wish to read a passage from the opinion of the court to show what view was taken of the rights and privileges of the citizen fifty years ago or so—in 1821. The court will observe that this case did not bring directly before the court the power of the Congress of the United States, or rather of either branch of the Congress of the United States, to commit the body of the citizen to the common jail of the District for an alleged contempt—it brought into view the liability of the Sergeant-at-Arms for executing an order of the House of Representatives; and these are two very different things. A man may be very innocent in executing an order, and yet the order itself may be a very questionable authority. The liberty of the citizen under the order may be one thing; the liability of the officer for executing the order is another thing, and an entirely different thing. I read now from page 230, from the case of Anderson vs. Dunn, 6 Wheaton, 1821—fifty-four years ago.

After speaking at some length on the authority of the Legislative Assembly, the court said:

"Nor would their situation be materially relieved by resorting to their legislative power within the District. That power may indeed be applied to many purposes; was intended by the Constitution to extend to many purposes; to the security and dignity of the General Government; but there are purposes of a more grave and general character than the offenses which may be denominated 'contempt,' which, from their very nature admit of no precise definition." * * * * *

"We are not now considering the extent to which the punishing power of Congress by a legislative act may be carried. On that subject the bounds of their power are to be found in the provisions of the Constitution."

That is, the bounds of the power of the entire Congress are to be found in the Constitution—the bounds of the power of one of the branches of Congress to punish are to be found somewhere else than in the Constitution; because they are not there.

"The present question is, what is the extent of the punishing power which the deliberative assemblies of the Union may assume, and exercise on the principle of self-preservation?

"And the analogy and the nature of the case furnish the answer, 'the least possible power adequate to the end proposed,' which is the power of imprisonment. It may at first view, from the history of the practice of our legislative bodies, be thought to extend to other inflictions, but every other will be found to be mere commutation for confinement; since commitment alone is the alternative where the individual proves contumacious. And even to the duration of imprisonment a period is imposed by the nature of things, since the existence of a power that imprisons is indispensable to its continuance; and although the legislative power continues perpetual, the legislative body ceases to exist the moment of its adjournment or periodical dissolution. It follows that the imprisonment must terminate with that adjournment. This view of the subject necessarily sets bounds to the exercise of caprice which has sometimes disgraced the deliberative assemblies, when under the influence of strong passion or wicked leaders, but the instances of which have long since remained on record only as historical facts, not as precedents for imitation"—

And they probably may be, though still continuing as historical facts, though not as precedents for imitation—

"In the present fixed and settled state of English institutions there is more danger of their being revived, probably, than in our own. But the American legislative bodies have never possessed or pretended to the omnipotence which constitutes a leading feature of the legislative assembly of Great Britain, and which may have led occasionally to the exercise of caprice under the specious appearance of merited resentment."

Now, may it please your honor, this is the leading case. It is the great case, and it is the only case that I have heard relied on, so far, for showing what, by the authority of judicial tribunals in our country, or by the judicial tribunal which expounds the supreme law of the land, the power of either House to commit for contempt may be.

This is a case, as I said before, in which the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House was prosecuted in an action at common law for trespass, because he had executed or arrested the party under the order of the Speaker, to bring him forward for a contempt. That contempt consisted in the offer to bribe a member of the body. The contempt here spoken of is of an entirely different character. It is the refusal to answer the questions propounded. The two offenses, if offenses they both be, are matters entirely different in their character, as the court will at once perceive, and such modifications can be made in the application to the case now at bar of the principle laid down in the case I have just quoted as the difference in the two state of facts necessarily presents.

We take it, therefore, may it please your honor, that according to the decision which was made in 1821 we are not to look to the Constitution of the United States for the power of the House of Representatives to punish for contempt, but we are to look to another and a different quarter; that as to the custom of parliamentary bodies, we are to look to the limitations which are set by the Supreme Court of the United States here on that power; and it is a singular circumstance that although it is admitted that the House of Representatives had the power in their discretion to punish, and though there was nothing in the Constitution nor the law that limited that discretion, yet the judicial tribunal itself, which did act and could only act under the Constitution and the law, did find a mode of settlement and limit to their discretion—a difference which, if it were proper to speak of in any other than the most deferential way of the Supreme Court of the United States, might be said to be somewhat inconsistent. However, there it is. We who are to be guided by these decisions must reconcile them as we may.

In speaking of legislative assemblies throughout the Union, may it please your honor, we must bear this in mind, that the Legislatures of the United States expand as to their attributes and powers in striking contrast to the legislative department of the General Government. For the Legislatures of the Union have, by the nature of their organization, and by the principles of the State government, all the powers which are not expressly denied to them by the Constitution itself, whereas the Congress of the United States has only those powers which are expressly delegated to it by the Constitution. The powers of the Legislatures of the States are unlimited, except where restrained by constitutional enactment. The powers of the Congress of the United States are strictly limited to the cases provided for in the Constitution itself, having only power to do those things which are set down in clear terms in the Constitution, or such things as may be necessary and proper to carry delegated powers into effect. Therefore no analogy can be drawn from the authority of legislative assemblies in the various States of the Union, and we must look to the Constitution of the United States, the laws of the land, and the acts of Congress, and the interpretation which has been set upon them by the Supreme Court of the United States, which for all purposes of investigation in the courts is the supreme and final interpreter of the Constitution. We have advanced, therefore, may it please your honor, thus far that it has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, in a certain instance where a bribe was offered, the House of Representatives had power, drawn from some vague, unknown, and undefined series of customs, to punish for contempt. What is its power now in the particular instance before the court? I suppose that after reading such a decision, it will not be denied that the members of the House of Representatives are in a certain degree limited. They do not possess all the powers of the British Parliament. For instance, in the case of Robert Walpole, who was a member of the House of Commons, the House of Commons not only expelled him for having given a bribe, but also committed him to the Tower as a prisoner. It would be abundantly clear that under our Constitution that could not be the case here, because the power of Congress of either branch over their members is expulsion alone. I hold it would be clear that if in addition to expulsion the House of Representatives should attempt to inflict imprisonment on a member, he would be immediately liberated by a judicial tribunal.

This brings you to a consideration of the question as to what are limitations; what are the powers of either branch of Congress. In the first place, it is clear that you have the constitutional limitation. A member may be expelled for contempt. Either House must judge in the last instance (the last resort) of the qualifications of its own members, and in these investigations of course they have the powers of judicature. And again, may it please your honor, if this parliamentary law exists from which either branch of Congress draws its powers, privileges, and rights, it is not only limited by the Constitution, but it must necessarily be limited by positive statutes, because—and I urge this again—the Constitution itself says that the Constitution and laws made in pursuance of it shall be the supreme law of the land; and if this lex parliamentaria does exist in our country, it must exist as a part of the law of the land, and must be overriden and controlled by the constitutional provisions or the acts of Congress made in pursuance of the Constitution, which that instrument itself says shall be the highest law of the land.

Now, I will, may it please your honor, lay down this principle, as to the nature of which I presume there will be no difference arising between the counsel on the other side and myself, that when a difference between the common law and a statue arises, it is the statute that is to prevail. This plain principle is elementary, and is laid down by Mr. Blackstone in the first volume of his Commentaries, in this edition, on page 88, edition of 1860, paragraph 7:

"Where the common law and the statute differ, the common law gives place to the statute, and an old statute gives place to a new one."

The two principles are, precisely the same. Now, if there be a common law of Parliament, ex parliamentaria, in our country, and Congress proceeded to establish the statute or written law on the same subject, which of the two is to prevail? The common law, the law of custom of Parliament, which existed up to the time of the passage of the statute, or the statute law? It is perfectly clear. The answer is given by the learned commentator himself. The principle is perfectly applicable, and arises at once for its application here. The statute is to prevail over the antecedent custom. Now I shall proceed to fortify this position, may it please your honor, by the most irrefragable authorities, so that if there is the slightest doubt existing with regard to it in the mind of the court or of the learned counsel who are opposed to me, I venture to say that after I shall have quoted the authorities I have before me that doubt will be entirely and forever set at rest. My principle is this: that when enlarging the idea, without in the slightest degree changing it as it is laid down in Blackstone—that when there are two statutes, one earlier and one later, the latter being upon the same subject-matter as the former, and provisions in the former statute which are not mentioned, but which are left out, are repealed, and cease to exist—if that be the case with statute law, may it please your honor, still more must it be the case when the difference arises between the statute law and the common law or the law of custom. In order to illustrate this principle, I will proceed to call the attention of the court, in the first place, to the case of Ellis vs. Page, 1 Pickering, 44. In order to be brief, because the court will examine these authorities with the attention they merit, I will read what is on top of page 45.

"It is a well-settled rule that when any statute is revised or one act framed for another, some parts being omitted, the parts omitted are not to be revised by construction, but are to be considered as annulled, although they remain on the statute-book, and have not by any express legislation been repealed."

"To hold otherwise would be to impute to the legislature gross carelessness or negligence, which is altogether inadmissible. We are not, therefore, at liberty to suppose that the proviso or exception in the provincial statute was omitted by mistake; and if not, then clearly it was the intention of the legislature to place all the parole premises on the same footing, for such is the obvious import of the language of the statute of frauds."

This fully justifies what I have stated, that when in a subsequent statute revising a former one certain expressions of the former statute are omitted, though no reference in positive terms whatever be made to them, such portions so omitted are entirely annulled. I quote further from Nichols vs.——, 5 Pickering, 169:

"PER CURIAM. We think the statute of 1785, chapter 24, on which the qui tam action is founded, is repealed, if not by statute of 1800, chapter 57—and which seems to have a different object in view—yet certainly by statute of 1817, chapter 191, which appears to cover the whole subject-matter of the statute of 1785. By the statute of 1817, the selling of tickets in any lottery not granted or permitted by this commonwealth is prohibited under no new penalty; and where the Legislature impose a second penalty for an offense, whether smaller or larger than the former one, a party cannot be allowed to sue on one or the other at his option. This point of the repeal by implication is supported by authority. In the case of Bartlett vs. King, 12 Massachusetts Reports, 557, an exceedingly useful statute, passed in 1754, concerning donations and bequests to pious and charitable uses, was held not to be enforced, the Legislature having in 1785, legislated upon the same subject, but omitted to re-enact the provisions of that statute. This view of the case settles the first action against the plaintiff."

Now, by the undefined lex parliamentaria by the undefined and uncertain law of Parliament, it was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that the House of Representatives had the right to punish for contempt, to punish at its discretion under the control of the court so far that their honors the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States in that instance said the punishment must be the least possible adequate to the nature of the offense, and must be imprisonment. It did not say how long imprisonment must be, except that it must terminate with the power of the body inflicting it. So that your honor will perceive that, under the law as laid down in 6 Wheaton, 1821, the power of the House of Representatives stood thus: Congress, about to expire on the 4th March, has before it a contumacious witness on the 3d March, and he refuses to answer; the Sergeant-at-Arms is directed to take him into custody, and to hold him there in the common jail or elsewhere; but on the 4th of March at twelve o'clock he goes out.

The COURT. He goes out with Congress?

Mr. DURANT. Goes out with Congress.

The COURT. Adjourns at the same time?

Mr. DURANT. Adjourns at the same time.

That was the law as laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States. That was the law which, may it please your honor, I said when I opened this case, as an advocate I am not permitted to dispute. I take it that was the law of the country at that time, in 1821; and I am perfectly willing to admit that it has been the law of the country ever since, for that decision, to my knowledge, has never been disturbed. I am not aware that the same point has ever come up before the Supreme Court of the United States in any subsequent case. There was the law of the land. A contumacious witness might, under the lex parliamentaria, be punished in a certain way. If the Congress of the United States, by a positive law made according to the Constitution, and hence the supreme law of the land, had directed such contumacious witness, in a case subsequent to the passage of that law, to be punished in another and different way, as the last statute overrides the preceding law under the authority of the cases I have just quoted, it is the only law under which he could be punished. I will advert to another case which was mentioned in the report I read last of 12 Massachusetts, at page 555, and the following, and I will read a passage from page 563. In speaking of the construction of a certain statute——

Judge FISHER. What is the title of the case?

Mr. DURANT. Bartlett vs. King.

Mr. Durant then read as follows:

"It is not, however, very material now to settle the construction of that statute, as we are fully satisfied it is virtually repealed by the subsequent statute of 1785, chapter 51. A subsequent statute revising the whole subject-matter of the former one, and evidently intended as a substitute for it, although it contains no express words to that effect, on the principles of law, as well as of reason and common sense, operates to repeal the former. According to the case of the King against Cator, in which it was decided that a former statute inflicting a punishment of £100 and three months' imprisonment on persons enticing away artificers was virtually repealed by a subsequent statute inflicting £500 penalty and of twelve months' imprisonment for the same offense. The same principle was adopted in the case of the King against Davis. All the subject-matter of the act of 28 George II is contained in the statute of 1785. A part only of its restrictions and limitations in the second section is omitted in the latter, and it is very obvious by comparing them that the legislature considered the latter as a complete substitute and a repeal of the former."

After what I have stated, which I trust is already abundantly clear on the strength of authority, as it is clear in reason, I will call the attention of the court to 11 Wallace, case of Stewart vs. Cahn, page 502.

I merely quote the summing up of the court, in which they state the pith of the whole argument, and lay down the principle on the bottom of the page 502:

"It is a rule of law that where a revising statute or one enacted for another omits provisions contained in the original act, the parts omitted cannot be kept in force by construction, but are annulled."

The particular point they were discussing then was the effect of the statute of 1867 on the twenty-fifth section of the judiciary act of 1789, which provides for writs of error from the highest courts of a State, in which a judgment or decree can be had under certain circumstances to the Supreme Court of the United States; and as some important provisions of the section of the act—twenty-fifth section of the act of 1789—had been omitted in the revising act of 1867, it became important for the Supreme Court of the United States to examine what was their condition, and they decided they must be considered as having been repealed, not being found—being omitted from the succeeding statute. And in a recent case, which I am not able to give your honor the title of, but which was decided last Monday in the Supreme Court of the United States, it is still more formally and pointedly decided that the twenty-fifth section of the act of 1789 is entirely superseded and repealed by the act of 1867; though, as I have said, some important provisions of the twenty-fifth section of the act are not embodied in the act of 1867; and this on the principle already adverted to, that when the subsequent statute revises the former one it is taken for granted, in reason and on authority, that the subsequent and last statute exhausts the power of the Legislature and does all that they design to do or have done. It is not probably very important I should quote the case of Burnham against Morrissey, but I will direct the attention of the court to it as an interesting case, and it bears somewhat on the features of this. In the fourteenth volume of Grey, page 240, Grey, the prisoner, was confined in the common jail, and no doubt the idea of this species of confinement occurred to the House of Representatives upon the suggestions of the practice in Massachusetts by the sergeant-at-arms of the house of representatives of Massachusetts. The prisoner was brought out under a writ of habeas corpus. The sergeant-at-arms of the house of representatives of Massachusetts being only the sergeant-at-arms of a State Legislature, did not suppose that he could refuse to obey the order of a court in the State of Massachusetts, and brought the prisoner into court—a very natural thing for an officer to do who understands his duty under the law—and the court proceeded to inquire into the causes of commitment. I will only read the syllabus:

"The court has power to inquire into the lawfulness of imprisonment by order of the house of representatives of Massachusetts."

Has the power to do it. They said there that the house of representatives has power to imprison, not by any parliamentary law, but because the State of Massachusetts says they have that power. And they said that the sergeant-at-arms had a right to keep him in jail if the jailer consented. I do not know whether the jailer consented here in our case; probably it is not important to inquire; but those were the circumstances of the case there. All the cases, as I have said, arising in the State courts stand on very different principles when they are interpreting their own State constitutions from ours, because those Legislatures have unlimited powers while ours has only limited powers. In 1857, when there was some great tariff discussion before the House, some gentleman of the press, as gentlemen of the press sometimes will do, insinuated that the manufacturers of Massachusetts had sent large sums of money—I do not know whether they said $750,000 or not; it may not have been necessary to send that amount, in their opinion—but that they had sent large sums of money to affect legislation. Immediately a committee of investigation was appointed to find out what legislators had been influenced by the manufacturers of Massachusetts, and they at once stood in the presence of this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. They at once stood in the presence of this idea of the law. They were not judges and lawyers in the House of Representatives; they were citizens representing the people; and they said, "Have we or have we not power to punish this man? He will not answer. He has made the grave allegation that money has been used to influence this Congress, but he will not tell the sources of his information. What shall we do?" Why, the thing seemed to be very simple. All they had to do, according to the learned gentlemen on the other side, was to command him clicto colliga manus; but they said: "We cannot do this; we have no power to do it; we must have a law on the subject; all the power we have is entirely insufficient. We either have no power to do it at all," which was the opinion of some, "or we have only a restricted and exceeding limited power," which was probably the opinion of others or of many. And you will find in the debates on the subject, as I have recently read them, though of course those debates are no authority—I merely read them for my own information—that the chairman of the committee on the part of the Senate, when the House, hurriedly passing this bill, this bill of 1857, sent it up to the Senate, interrupted Mr. Crittenden, who had the floor at the time, in order to allow the bill to be reported. Mr. Crittenden gave way, and the bill was reported. It was referred, contrary to all usage, at the very same moment after having been read twice, to the Judiciary Committee, and on the same day the Judiciary Committee reported it back; but in the speech made at the time by the chairman of the committee, which I find in the thirty-sixth volume of the Congressional Globe, pages 425 to 434, the chairman of the committee said there was no such thing in the United States of America as lex parliamentaria, or common law of Parliament, which gave either House of Congress the right over the liberty of the citizen, and that it could only be invaded or could only be touched by due course of law.

Judge FISHER. Who was the chairman of the committee?

Mr. DURANT. One of the most distinguished gentlemen of that day, Mr. Robert Toombs of Georgia. Well, there was the condition of the law, may it please the court, at that time; vague, uncertain, indefinite. The House of Representatives said: "We have no power to punish this man. We must have a law." The Senate of the United States said: "We agree with you. There is no power to punish a contumacious witness." Or, on the other hand, they must have said, "There is a power to punish a contumacious witness, but it is not sufficient and complete." One or other of those positions, may it please your honor, must necessarily have been occupied at that time by either House of Congress. There they had no power at all, which was the opening of some; or they had inadequate power, which was the opinion of others. In either case, the logical result is precisely the same. They cured all defects, either of want of power on the one side or inadequacy of authority on the other, by the statute of 1857, which, according to the authoritative and logical decisions I have just had the honor of reading to you, exhausted all the power and repealed every other provision that existed on the subject, either of the common parliamentary law, or by preceding statutes in pari materia.

This act has been re-enacted in 1873 in the Revised Statutes, which have been frequently read to you. I do not wish to comment on that act further than to say that this is one of the most extraordinary acts of legislation that ever passed the legislature of a free government; for in one of these sections it compels a witness to speak those things that would criminate himself; it compels him to violate the obligations of professional confidence and honor, simply saying that you shall not be called in question in any other place for what you have said here; it violates the most sacred guards that are placed around the honor and integrity of men, for in a court of justice the judge will not allow a question to be propounded, simply and solely because it may make him liable to criminal prosecution. He will not allow a witness to be insulted by having questions propounded to him which tend to degrade him in the estimation of his fellow-citizens. Now, I do not examine into the question as to whether the Congress has the power to grant such an act as that or not; it does not come up here. But they have said, may it please your honor, as I shall proceed to read, exactly what shall be done. I will read the one hundred and third and one hundred and fourth sections of the Revised Statutes:

"No witness is privileged to refuse to testify to any fact, or to produce any paper, respecting which he shall be examined by either House of Congress, or by any committee of either House of Congress, upon the ground that his testimony to such fact or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous.

"Fourth. Whenever a witness, summoned as mentioned in section 102, fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact under the seal of the Senate or House to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter to the grand jury for their action."

This was the act adopted in 1857, and re-enacted under the Revised Statutes of 1873. What was the state of the law then, may it please your honor, antecedent to this act? As I quoted from the sixth volume of Wheaton, when a witness was contumacious it was then the duty of the Speaker of the House of Representatives to issue his warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms to imprison him as long as Congress might choose to keep him in prison, not extending beyond the term of their session. The Speaker might issue his warrant saying "Put this man in prison or keep him in confinement for ten days, or for thirty days, or for six months," if the session of Congress might last so long. We have sessions, long sessions, which even endure longer than that; and that was the duty of the Speaker then. A contumacious witness was then to be punished under the authority of the parliamentary law by the order of the House, carried out in the warrant of the Speaker directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms to imprison the witness—for the court said in 6 Wheaton no punishment but imprisonment could be inflicted—to imprison a contumacious witness for as long as the House might direct; provided always it did not exceed the duration of their term of service. And it is precisely the same as if it had then been written down in the statute, "When before a committee of either House, or before an investigation of either branch sitting in Committee of the Whole, a witness shall be contumacious and refuse to answer, the Speaker of the House, or the President of the Senate, as the case may be, shall, on the order of either branch, issue his warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms, and the prisoner be imprisoned or kept in custody for as long a term as the warrant may direct." I say that the condition of the law then as laid down by the decisions of the Supreme Court was none other than precisely equivalent to a statute framed in the language I have just uttered.

And, may it please your honor, Congress in 1857 again legislated upon the subject and said:

"Whenever a witness, summoned as aforesaid in section 102, fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House"—

Now what are the cases about? Is there any exception, in the first place? Is this for a general class of cases, embracing them all, or is it for a certain number of cases, embracing particulars specified only? It is not, may it please your honor, the latter. It is a law framed to meet every case, for it commences with the expression, "Whenever a witness does so and so;" and that, in plain language, as everybody who hears me knows—that, in plain language, means, "in all cases when a witness shall be found in such and such circumstances." Not that if he does so in this case, or that case, or the other, enumerating as many as Congress might choose, but that whenever he does it, at all times and on all occasions when he does it, every act of this kind that he commits shall be treated in a certain way; and how—

"the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact under the seal of the Senate or the seal of the House to the district attorney."

Does it say, may it please your honor, that the Speaker shall commit him to the District jail? It says no such thing, but it says that in every conceivable case where a witness may be contumacious the Speaker of the House shall certify the fact to the district attorney. I say, may it please the court, on the most sure, clear, and certain principles of interpretation of human language, that the expressions of this section, just as the expressions of the act of 1857 from which it is borrowed, include every case of contumacy before a committee of either branch of Congress that mankind can conceive, and that when the statute law says, "Whenever a witness does so and so," it means that in all cases in which he does so, and that in those cases the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House has but one duty to perform, and not more than one. It is to certify his case to the district attorney for the District, with, of course, incidental power to keep him until he shall be taken care of by the district attorney. It is not to be supposed that he is to be transferred to the district attorney in any other than by lawful means. It constitutes the act, may it please your honor, a misdemeanor, punishes it by fine and imprisonment, and directs, in accordance with the terms of the Constitution, that the matter shall be laid before the grand jury, for happily in our country no man is to be deprived of his life, liberty, or property except by judgment of his peers and the laws of the land, and he has a right, and it is the duty of the prosecuting officers in the first instance to lay his case before a grand jury of his fellow-citizens. Now, may it please your honor, I claim that this exhausted the whole power of the House of Representatives in the case of a contumacious witness.

I will proceed to show what the reason from analogy will demonstrate. In 1789 the judiciary act declared that the courts of the United States should have the power to punish for contempts. The expressions of the act of 1789 were—I am now reading from the Revised Statutes, section 725, which reiterates, word for word, the language of the act of 1789. "The said courts"—speaking of all the courts in the United States—"shall have power to impose and administer all necessary oaths, and to punish by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, contempts of their authority." It is a literal transcript from the act of 1789. Under that legislation, may it please your honor, what were the powers of Congress? To punish, at their discretion, by fine and imprisonment. I do not know that that discretion was ever, it certainly was very seldom, if ever, abused. There was some complaint about it. There was a complaint in the State of Maryland, in the case of Mr. Samuel Chase, and there was a complaint in Missouri in the case of Judge Peck. Instances of the abuse of that power, under the act of 1789, were so exceedingly few, however, that we may count them for nothing. Yet under that act clearly the judges had unlimited authority, even to imprisonment or fine, according to their discretion. But, may it please your honor, in 1831 the Congress of the United States, by an express statute declared how, when, and under what circumstances courts of the United States should punish for contempt, and laid down they should only punish for those contempts which were committed in their immediate presence, or so close in the vicinity of the court as to disturb its proceedings, and laid down what should be the punishment inflicted, and laid down in a subsequent section "those persons who attempt to bribe judges," &c., detailing a great number of cases, which it is not necessary to specify, and how they should be treated, "by imprisonment and indictment by the grand jury, and trial by the petit jury." Congress, in short, used this language:

"That the power to punish for contempts"—

This is the language as embodied in the same section of the Revised Statutes, 725—

"shall not be construed to extend to any case except the misbehavior of any person in their presence, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice—the misbehavior of any of the officers of the said courts in their official transactions, and the disobedience or resistance by any such officer or by any juror, party, witness, or other person, to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the said courts."

In 1831 this act was passed, and this act settled and defined the powers of the courts of the United States, but changing them materially from the large discretions which they had in the act of 1789. This analogy, may it please your honor, is perfectly parallel to the facts in the present case. Antecedent to 1857, by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, either branch of Congress had the power to imprison a contumacious witness at its discretion, not extending beyond the term of their own service. By the act of 1789 the courts of the United States had the power to punish at their discretion witnesses, as I have just read. Then the powers of the courts being limited and restrained by the act of 1831, it follows by strict analogical reasoning, which is perfectly conclusive in the present instance, the power of Congress or either branch of Congress to punish for contempt is concluded and limited by the express act of 1857, as embodied in the Revised Statutes of 1873.

The act of 1831, then, regulating contempts in the courts, necessarily superseded and limited with strict definition the powers of the courts as they had been granted by the Congress of the United States under the Constitution and the act of 1789 and in the same way the previously undefined powers of either branch of Congress to punish for contempts under the lex parliamentaria as expounded in 6 Wheaton, in the case of Anderson vs. Dunn, are limited and defined by the act of 1857 as re-embodied in the statutes of 1873. The course of interpretation uniformly and conclusive in the courts, being in the first place that the provisions of a statute contrary to the common law repeal the principles of the common law so far as they are inconsistent with the statute of that kind; that the subsequent statute repealed all parts of the former statute, though not expressly mentioned, when the subsequent statute is evidently a revision of the former, being then a clear exposition of the legislative will; that the second statute will stand in place of the first. If there should be still any doubt remaining in the mind of the court, which I think there cannot be, it will be removed by referring to the proceedings of the House of Representatives itself in this very case. They are embodied in the exhibit which I filed when filing the answer to this return.

Your honor will find the proceedings of the House on this question, beginning on page 16 and following on of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 7th of January. Here is the resolution on page 17: "said witness be recommitted to such custody for a continuance of such contempt, and that such custody shall continue until the said witness shall communicate to the House, through said committee, that he is ready to appear before such committee and make such answer; and that in executing this order the Sergeant-at-Arms shall cause said Irwin to be kept in his custody in the jail of the District of Columbia."

After some debate that was adopted. Your honor will find what occurred on its adoption on page 21:

"The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to a point which affects his own duty in this matter. The Clerk will read the third section of the act relating to cases of this kind."

The COURT. That is the section requiring him to certify the case.

Mr. DURANT. Yes, sir. As soon as this order which I have just read was passed, directing the Speaker to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to commit him to the common jail, the Speaker says:

"I call the attention of the House to what I deem my duty"—

What does he deem his duty? It was too plain. It was prescribed in this act. And after the section was read, he says:

"The question in the mind of the Chair is whether the witness having refused to testify and having been brought before the House, the time has arrived for the action of the Chair under this statute, which seems to be mandatory. On this point the Chair will follow the instruction of the House."

Well, the House gave no instructions. The House did not say a word.

"The SPEAKER. The statute appears to be mandatory in imposing this duty. In the case of Joseph B. Stewart two years ago it was not performed, and there was some criticism in consequence. The attention of the Chair was not called to the precise language of the statute in that case until some time afterward."

I think that was one or two years ago. The prisoner on that occasion was not treated by the Speaker as he should have been, because the Speaker had overlooked the law. That does not alter the rights, of course, of the prisoner now before your honor. But the course of proceedings in this case was that the moment that the House of Representatives had ordered the prisoner to be taken in custody, the Speaker says:

"I call the attention of the House to what is my duty under this statute; and that is I am to certify this proceeding to the district attorney of the District."

And that was for the purposes which the statute states, to the end that he might be presented to the grand jury, and if a true bill be found and he be tried before a petit jury, and if convicted, punished at the discretion of the court, under the statute, to one year's imprisonment, or else a thousand dollars or less fine.

Now, may it please your honor, it is a plain principle of reason, a plain principle of common sense, as it is of universal custom of deliberative bodies, that when an officer specially calls the attention of the body to a course which he deems his duty under the law, and says, "This course I will pursue unless the body over which I preside and of which I am the organ gives me contrary instructions," and no contrary instructions are given, it is an acquiescence in his view of the law, and it is the authority of their assent for him to proceed in the way in which he tells them he is about to proceed. It is eminently a case where the law maxim applies, que tacet consentire videtur—that whenever any man or a body of men has a duty in hand to reply to a statement made and is silent, the truth of that statement or the propriety of the course indicated is acquiesced in. This is a familiar principle to every lawyer, and is acted upon in every case into the circumstances of which it enters.

You have, therefore, may it please your honor, in this case, it seems to me, a very plain question before you. It is this: What is the power of the House of Representatives or the Senate of the United States over a contumacious witness who refuses to answer? And thereupon two inquiries are suggested. If they have a power over him, is it a European and monarchical power resulting from uncertain, undefined, ambiguous claims of power which has no limit whatever? Or is it a power regulated by a law by which every power should be regulated in a country which boasts of freedom and which is a government of laws and not of men? I say, may it please your honor, there can be no hesitation in the answer to this inquiry. We boast of being governed by law and law alone. We can have no doubt that when the whole Congress of the United States, with the sanction of the executive power, in the exercise of the constitutional privilege of approving bills, has declared that contumacious witness shall be dealt with in one particular way, that that supersedes all other modes of treating him, and that he is then subject only to the laws of the land, as expressed in the legislative will, and as it is to be expounded by an impartial tribunal when the case shall come before it. I hold, therefore, that under the law as expounded in 1821, as it was amended and embodied in the final will of Congress in 1857 and 1873, there can no longer be any matter of doubt, and that the liberties of the citizen in this country, whether he be contumacious or criminal in any other way, are to be determined by judicial tribunals under the law and in no other form or manner; and that the contemporaneous action of this very House of Representatives, when the order for the imprisonment of the prisoner at the bar was given, is clear and conclusive proof that such was the interpretation of the Speaker of the House, and it was the construction of the statute as placed upon it by the House itself by their acquiescence in his interpretation.

I believe, may it please your honor, that these are all the remarks I have to offer at this stage of the case, and I shall wait to hear what falls from the counsel on the other side.

The following are the sections of the Revised Statutes referred to in Mr. Durant's argument:

Chapter XIII Revised Statutes of the United States.

SECTION 754. Application for a writ of habeas corpus shall be made to the court or justice or judge authorized to issue the same by complaint in writing, signed by the person for whose relief it is intended, setting forth the facts concerning the detention of the party restrained, in whose custody he is detained, and by virtue of what claim or authority, if known. The facts set forth in the complaint shall be verified by the oath of the person making the application.

SEC. 755. The court or justice or judge to whom such application is made shall forthwith award a writ of habeas corpus, unless it appears from the petition itself that the party is not entitled thereto. The writ shall be directed to the person in whose custody the party is detained.

SEC. 756. Any person to whom such writ is directed shall make due return thereof within three days thereafter, unless the party be detained beyond the distance of twenty miles; and if beyond that distance and not beyond the distance of one hundred miles within ten days; and if beyond the distance of one hundred miles, twenty days.

SEC. 757. The person to whom the writ is directed shall certify to the court or justice or judge before whom it is returnable the true cause of the detention of such party.

SEC. 758. The person making the return shall, at the same time, bring the body of the party before the judge who granted the writ.

SEC. 759. When the writ is returned, a day shall be set for the hearing of the cause, not exceeding five days thereafter, unless the party petitioning requests a longer time.

SEC. 760. The petitioner or the party imprisoned or restrained may deny any of the facts set forth in the return, or may allege any other facts that are material to the case. Said denials or allegations shall be under oath. The return and all suggestions made against it may be amended, by leave of the court or justice or judge, before or after the same are filed, so that thereby the material facts may be ascertained.

SEC. 761. The court or justice or judge shall proceed in a summary way to determine the facts of the case by hearing the testimony and arguments, and thereupon dispose of the party as law and justice require.

RULING OF THE COURT.

Mr. Shellabarger arising to address the court on behalf of the respondent——

The Court said: Before you proceed, Mr. Shellabarger, I desire to make some suggestions, which may, perhaps, abridge the argument, if not dispense with it. My solicitude in the case has been to preserve, in its full integrity and force, the trial by habeas corpus; because, next to the jury trial, I regard it as one of the most invaluable privileges and rights belonging to our system of government. I have, therefore, listened with disfavor to a motion to quash the writ in this case. The petition upon which the writ is founded was presented by counsel whose position at the bar entitle them to a most respectful consideration, and I could scarcely indulge the idea that a frivolous or improvident application would come from such a source, and after some considerable reflection upon the subject I concluded to grant the writ. When the writ of habeas corpus is allowed, the subsequent proceedings are regulated by absolute statute law. The officer to whom it is directed is required to make return to the writ and to bring along with his return the body of the person in custody before the officer who issued the writ. The relator is then secured the right by express provision of the statute of denying the facts stated in that return and of introducing new facts upon the record that may be material in the case. The further direction of the law is that the judge shall then hear the case in a summary manner. These are all directions in the law, which, in my opinion, do not rest in the discretion of the court to execute or disregard, and which the officer issuing this writ has no option but to observe; and in all the proceedings which have taken place up to this point I may safely say that there have been no deviations from the requirements of the statute in this respect.

Since the return came in, and since no fact in that return was denied, it was quite evident to my own mind what the final result of this case must be. I did not feel at liberty, however, at that particular point in the case, to act upon my own convictions, however clear they might have been, because I still regard it as the right secured by the law to the party to deny those facts and to introduce other facts which might still entitle him to the remedy which he sought. And I therefore say that no judge, in advance, has any right to say to any man seeking this invaluable remedy that he shall not have it, because it has been denied that he has such right by the officer holding him in custody. I have listened to the discussion of the power of the House to commit for contempt this morning, and the effect of the statute of 1857 upon that power.

There can be no doubt that either House of Congress has the right of committing for contempts—all contempts which infringe upon the order, the dignity, or the purity of their legislation, and for this purpose it is not denied but that they have the power of examination, of investigation, and of calling witnesses into their presence or before their committees, and of administering oaths and putting inquiries and of punishing a refusal to answer. These powers of the House are so very clearly established now, that the learned counsel has not impeached them, unless Congress, by the enactment of 1857, has abrogated this almost indispensable power in Congress. It is to be observed that the statute applies only to a particular species of contempt, and that is to witnesses who refuse to answer questions upon subjects of investigation before Congress or before its committees.

It is said, inasmuch as Congress has created the act of a witness refusing to answer a misdemeanor, they have abolished it as to contempt. I cannot so regard it. It appears to me that the punishment provided in the statute for this as an offense does not merge the contempt and does not abolish the power of the House. It has not been so understood from the time of the enactment of the statute; and I believe this is the first time that that aspect of the case has ever been presented for judicial examination. There is nothing clearer than that the same act may be both a misdemeanor and a contempt. If one member should strike another while the House was in session and in its presence, it would be a contempt of the House and a misdemeanor under the laws, for which he could be punished. It would be no answer to the proceedings in the House for contempt to say that he was liable under the general law of the land to be punished for the misdemeanor.

In the celebrated case of Sam Houston, who was brought before the bar of the House for contempt in striking a member of Congress for words spoken in debate, the power of the House to punish him was disputed; but it was held to be within the power of the House upon the most solemn consideration. And after having been tried and convicted and punished for contempt by the House, he was prosecuted for misdemeanor, probably in this very court, or at all events in one of our local tribunals here. His defense to that action was his conviction before the House for the contempt, and that he could not twice be punished for the same offense. This, of course, was overruled, and Mr. Houston, notwithstanding his distinguished position, having formerly himself been a member of the House, was punished both for contempt and for a misdemeanor before the two jurisdictions.

The power of the House to punish for a contempt extends only to confinement, and terminates with the session of Congress. If the party were found guilty of a contempt but twenty-four hours before the period of adjournment, that must be the limitation of the punishment. Now, this might be a very inadequate protection to the House and a very inadequate punishment for a party in contempt. I have no doubt that Congress intended that recusant witnesses, or witnesses refusing to answer pertinent inquiries upon proper subjects of investigation, should be punished beyond the power of the House to reach them; and that they therefore created the offense a misdemeanor, to be punished by fine and imprisonment in the courts of justice. This statute can by no means purge the contempt or abolish the power of the House to protect itself in this respect as it is able to protect itself from every other species of contempt.

If there ever had been in my mind any doubt about the refusal of a witness to answer a proper question at the bar of the House being a contempt, this statute would now remove it, because it creates it a misdemeanor; and any man who commits a misdemeanor, either by statute or common law, in the presence of a deliberative assembly commits contempt.

Entertaining these views as to the power of the House to punish as for a contempt a witness who refuses to answer a pertinent question in regard to a subject-matter under investigation, there is nothing left for the court to do but to dismiss the writ. I desire to say, however, and I said in the outset, that one of the great objects which I have had in persisting in the observance of the statute law in this case was that nothing might be done which could hereafter be quoted as an evil example. I believe when this writ issues that the party is entitled under it to his trial, as provided by statute, and I not only believe that, but furthermore, that it is entirely competent for any court of justice to inquire into the privilege of Congress, and that the doctrine that Congress is the judge, and the sole and exclusive judge of its own privileges, can never be the rule in a court of justice and can never be sustained. However much we may respect that distinguished body—and no man honors it more than myself—the very assumption of such a power would be dangerous; although, as Lord Denman observes with regard to the House of Commons, it would be improper to indulge in any thought that they would attempt to abuse it. The very assumption of such a power, I say, is dangerous and not to be countenanced anywhere. I am very glad indeed to believe, from the subsequent action of the House, that they quite concur in these views, as they have submitted the body of this man to the jurisdiction of this court to await its final action. It is far more satisfactory in every respect that, after the forms of law should have been observed, this judgment should be pronounced upon the whole case. With these views, it is my opinion that this writ ought to be dismissed, and that the prisoner should be remanded to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms; and my convictions are so clear on this subject that I have thought proper to interrupt counsel before they proceed further with the argument.

Hon. Samuel Shellabarger's reply to Mr. Durant's argument.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 18, 1875.

[NOTE.—The following are the main propositions of the argument of Mr. Shellabarger, of counsel for the respondent, as taken by the reporter from the brief which had been prepared for the purposes of reply, and which reply was dispensed with by the prompt decision of the case in favor of the respondent at the close of the opening argument for the relator.

This argument is here reported for the purpose of placing upon record a synopsis of the legal grounds upon which the respondent rests his resistance to the invasion of the privileges of the House of Representatives, which were alleged to be involved in the discharge prayed by the petition of Mr. Irwin.]

It is true, as has been repeatedly said by counsel for the relator, that the case now on hearing is one of singular gravity. It is one of singular delicacy also; not only because it involves the liberty of a citizen and the most cherished jurisdiction of the courts, given in defense of the liberties of the citizens, but also because the claims here asserted by the relator, pushed to their logical and necessary consequences, if not upon their very face, challenge and deny the very highest privilege of each House of Congress, and hence assail the very being of those Houses. Because the questions here raised and seriously urged for approval are thus delicate and momentous, I shall take care that each step I shall take in argument shall be taken with the utmost solicitude; that it shall be right, and that nothing shall be intentionally introduced or omitted, the introduction or omission of which may contribute to error in the result of this important cause. At the threshold of the case I wish to condense in a few sentences a synopsis of our reply to the position of opposing counsel, that our reluctance at disobeying the order of the House and making surrender of the relator to the custody of the court, with power to bail and to discharge, when the relator was undergoing the execution of the House's judgment of contempt, was unusual and illegal. Though that part of the case is now past, I shall here put upon record, at the head of this reply, a careful restatement of what I deem the high and most solemn duty of the courts and of the two Houses toward each other in such a case as was presented by the application for this writ.

First. Since the statute, in substance, requires that the application or petition for the writ shall disclose the grounds of the detention and the facts relied on as showing the detention to be unlawful, and since the issuance of the writ is both by statute and the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court, (Ex-parte Kearney, 7 Wheaton, 38,) not a matter of absolute right, and should be refused where the petition shows, as this one does, that the prisoner was held in execution of the judgment of the House, pronounced as to a subject-matter over which the House has, as a court, unquestioned, sole, and exclusive jurisdiction, to wit, the subject-matter of contempt of the authority of the House; therefore the issuance of the writ was improvident and an unintentional invasion of the privileges of the House.

Second. That there are cases in which, as a matter of law and right practice, the respondent has the right and it is his duty, without bringing the body into court, to make showing to the court awarding the writ that the writ ought to be dismissed, of which the case of Ableman against Booth, 21 Howard, 506, is an example, and this even where the writ was rightfully issued, as was decided in the Booth case.

Third. That much more in this case, where it is made to appear to the court both by the petition for a writ and the record of the House disclosed by the return, showing a conviction and a commitment for contempt of the authority of the House, as to which subject-matter of contempt the House has unquestioned jurisdiction, and which judgment no other tribunal can review or reverse, was it proper and competent for the respondent, on a motion to dismiss the writ as improvidently awarded, to show said facts before he surrendered the person to be discharged or bailed, according to the pleasure of such court, having no power to retry the question of contempt.

Fourth. That it is error to suppose, as was intimated by the judge during this hearing, that since the petition disputed the rightfulness of the questions which were refused to be answered, therefore the petition denied jurisdiction of the House over the subject-matter for which the relator was committed. The subject-matter which secured the jurisdiction of the House as the petitioner showed, for which he was convicted and for which he was committed, was "contempt" of the authority of the House, and was not the specific questions refused; as to the rightfulness of which questions the House alone, and no other tribunal, can judge.

Fifth. If, as claimed on the other side, the House must bow to every allowance of the writ, however violative of the principles laid down in Ex parte Kearney, 7 Wheaton, 38, and the House cannot even show on a motion to dismiss the writ that it was allowed, as was not done in this case, under the influence of the grossest imposition or mistake or a wanton abuse of the power of the court, and if the House must submit the person to be discharged at the pleasure of every Federal judge, then the supremely vital powers of the House of Representatives are completely at the mercy of every such judge in America who happens to have jurisdiction to issue the writ, and this although he acted at chambers when the House and its officers were wholly ignorant of the existence of the application.

With this statement in briefest outline of the principles which have actuated us hitherto in the progress of this case, I now proceed to the consideration of the question discussed by the able counsel who has just concluded his argument. The main point relied upon for the discharge of the prisoner is that the act of 1857, and the recent revision thereof, and which make the refusal of the prisoner to answer a misdemeanor and require the Speaker to certify, for prosecution, to the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia, have abolished all power of the House to commit or in any wise punish for this particular contempt, or to enforce answers from the recusant witness.

Other points are also made by the learned argument just ended touching the extent of the jurisdiction of the House, and also affecting the conclusiveness of its judgments in matters relating to its privileges. Each of these two views of the case, as presented by counsel, demands that I shall carefully state the sources from whence the House derives this power over contempts of its authority; the character in which it acts when it tries questions of contempt or questions affecting others of its privileges; the sources and extent of those privileges; the force and binding effects of these judgments touching these and other like questions. Though some of the propositions I am about to state may not be expressly questioned by the other side, yet I find it essential here to restate them, and to refresh our memory of them, to the end that I may show how fatal these propositions are to that main claim of the argument on the other side, namely, that the Congress has by law stripped both of its two Houses of one of the powers most essential to their very existence, and have delegated these powers to the keeping and the control of the grand and petit juries of the District of Columbia.

In now proceeding to the consideration of these various propositions to which I have just alluded, I shall content myself by stating them and the authorities on which they rest, and shall attempt little in the way of elaborate argument. And first of all, the very foundation on which the learned gentleman rested his whole case, and which, if removed, tumbles into ruin his entire argument, is this, in its effect, to wit: That since whatever power the two Houses possess over the matter of contempt of their authority by witnesses is derived from what he calls the lex parliamentaria, the common law of Parliament, and is not derived from the Constitution; and hence being so derived as a mere principle of common law, it is competent for Congress to either delegate it to grand juries, or to do with it what else the Congress may please. Now, this proposition is one which I respectfully submit is in the very teeth of the repeated, the express, elaborate, and unanimous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and is against the authority of every great writer upon our Constitution to whom we have access. The proposition is that the power of the House over and in the punishment of contempts is not derived from the Constitution. This is what I have just denied, and I now state, not in full, but briefly, the authorities upon which that denial is based. First, I assert that neither Congress nor either House of Congress possesses any power except such as is derived from the Constitution of the United States, either expressly or by implication. On this point the words of Chief Justice Marshall are, in Martin vs. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheaton, 326:

"The Government of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted by the Constitution, and the powers actually granted must be such as are expressly given or given by necessary implication."

Mr. Cooley states, page 9:

"The Government of the United States is one of enumerated powers, the Constitution being the instrument which specifies them, and in which authority should be found for the exercise of any power which the National Government assumes to possess."

Upon the very point now under consideration, to wit, whether the power of one of the Houses to imprison witnesses for contempt is one of the powers derived from the Constitution of the United States, the Supreme Court of the United States, after a most elaborate discussion in the case of Anderson vs. Dunn, 6 Wheaton, 204, decided that such power is one derived from the Constitution of the United States as one of the implied powers of the several Houses conferred by that instrument. The following is some of the language of the Supreme Court upon this point:

"If the House of Representatives possessed no authority to punish for contempt, the initiating process issued in the assertion of that authority must have been illegal; there was a want of jurisdiction to justify it.

"It is certainly true that there is no power given by the Constitution to either House to punish for contempts, except when committed by their own members; nor does the judicial or criminal power given to the United States in any part, expressly extend to the infliction of punishment for contempt of either House, or any one co-ordinate branch of the Government. Shall we, therefore, decide that no such power exists? It is true that such a power, if it exist, must be derived from implication, and the genius and spirit of our institutions are hostile to the exercise of implied powers. Had the faculties of man been competent to the framing of a system of Government which would have left nothing to implication, it cannot be doubted that the effort would have been made by the framers of the Constitution. But what is the fact? There is not in the whole of that admirable instrument a grant of powers which does not draw after it others, not expressed, but vital to their exercise; not substantive and independent, indeed, but auxiliary and subordinate." (6 Wheaton, 225, 226.)

"But it is argued that the inference, if any, arising under the Constitution is against the exercise of the powers here asserted by the House of Representatives; that the express grant of power to punish their members respectively, and to expel them, by the application of a familiar maxim, raises an implication against the power to punish any other than their own members.

"This argument proves too much; for its direct application would lead to the annihilation of almost every power of Congress. To enforce its laws upon any subject without the sanction of punishment is obviously impossible. Yet there is an express grant of power to punish in one class of cases only, and all the punishing power exercised by Congress in any cases except those which relate to piracy and offenses against the law of nations is derived from implication. Nor did the idea ever occur to any one that the express grant in one class of cases repelled the assumption of the punishing power in any other." (6 Wheaton, 231-233.)

"In reply to the suggestion that on this same foundation of necessity might be raised a superstructure of implied powers in the executive and every other department, and even ministerial officers of the Government, it would be sufficient to observe that neither analogy nor precedents support the assertion of such powers in any other than a legislative or judicial body." (6 Wheaton, 233, 234.)

Judge Kent, in speaking of this decision, in the first volume of his Commentaries, side page 236, says:

"There is no power expressly given to either House of Congress to punish for contempts, except when committed by their own members; but in the case of Anderson, who was committed by order of the House of Representatives for a contempt of the House and taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms, an action of trespass was brought against the officer, and the question on the power of the House to commit for contempt was carried by writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States. The court decided that the House had that power, and that it was an implied power, and of vital importance to the safety, character, and dignity of the House."

It is surely safe for us to assume upon these authorities that the power of the House of Representatives over the subject-matter of this commitment, to wit, contempt, is a power that it derives from the Constitution of the United States, and not from the common law of England. The state of the common law of England and of the rights of the two houses of Parliament are looked to by our courts for the two purposes—

First. Of determining whether it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution to confer this power over contempt as one of the implied powers of the Houses, and second to measure and define the extent of that power, if it existed. Having now established that this power over contempts and every other privilege of the several Houses is a power derived from the Constitution, we proceed to the next proposition of our argument.

Second. That the power to punish for contempt is one of the powers of the House, the extent and character of which is measured by the principles of the common law of Parliament, is also well settled. Mr. Cushing says, section 684, page 269:

"It may be laid down, therefore, first, that every legislative assembly in the United States possesses all the powers of jurisdiction in a general way which are recognized by the common parliamentary law."

See also Cushing, page 272, end of section 695, where it is said:

"In the foregoing, and all the States mentioned in this paragraph, therefore, as well those where constitutions do not, as in those where they do, contain the general clause above mentioned, it may be considered that each of the legislative branches has jurisdiction, according to the common parliamentary law, of all offenses committed against it by persons not members."

Mr. Cooley, in Constitutional Limitations, 134, says: "Each House may also punish for contempts of its authority by other persons without express authority from the Constitution therefor." And in support of this proposition he cites Anderson vs. Dunn, 6 Wheaton, 204; Burdett, vs. Abbott, 14 East, 1; Stockdale vs. Hansard, 9 Adolphus & Ellis, 231; Burnham vs. Morrissey, 14 Grey, 226; State vs. Matthews, 37 New Hamphire, 450.

Third. Each House, in acting on questions of contempt and the like, is a court; its acts are judicial in their nature, and a decision in such case, on a question of contempt, is a judgment of the court.

Cushing's Parliamentary Law, section 642, says, in speaking of the incidental powers of the House other than inquisitorial:

"The other incidental powers of a legislative assembly, being more strictly analogous to those exercised by judicial tribunals, constitute its judicial powers as distinguished from its legislative, and accordingly, in the exercise of these functions, a legislative assembly is considered as a court, and the journal of its proceedings a record." (Ex parte Kearney, 7 Wheaton, 38.)

Justice Story, in discussing the question of the power of one court to discharge on habeas corpus a person committed for contempt by another court, says:

"Adopting the words of Lord Chief Justice De Grey in Crosby's case, 3 Wilson, 188, 'When the House of Commons adjudged anything to be a contempt or breach of privilege, their adjudication is a conviction, and their commitment in consequence is execution. And no court can discharge on bail a prisoner that is in execution by the judge of another court.' * * * It can do nothing when a person is in execution by the judge of the court having competent jurisdiction."

In the same case, page 44, Story adds, quoting with approbation the words of Justice Blackstone:

"All courts, by which I mean to include the two houses of Parliament and the courts of Westminster Hall, can have no control in matters of contempt. The sole judicature of contempt and punishment thereof belongs exclusively, and without interfering, to each respective court. Infinite confusion and disaster would follow if courts by writs of habeas corpus could examine and determine the contempts of others."

In 1 Kent's Commentaries, side page 236, after showing by the case of Anderson vs. Dunn that the Houses held the implied and incidental power to imprison witnesses, the author adds these words:

"The decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Anderson is accompanied with a course of reasoning which would seem to be sufficient to place the authority of each House of Congress to punish contempts and breaches of privileges on the most solid foundation, independent of the absolute authority of the decision. The constitutional exercise of the same authority by each house of Parliament has been repeatedly vindicated in Westminster Hall. It is a power inherent in all legislative assemblies, and is essential to enable them to execute their great trust with freedom and safety, and it has been frequently exercised, not only in Congress but by the respective branches of the State Legislatures, and may be considered as indisputably acknowleged and settled. (Story's Commentaries, volume 2, pages 305, 317.) What acts shall amount to a contempt of either House of Congress are not defined, and must be left to the judgment and discretion of the House under the circumstances of each case."

As to the inconvenience resulting from the doctrine laid down in Anderson vs. Dunn, the Supreme Court adds: "Where the law is clear, this argument can be of no avail." And in Dunn vs. Anderson, 6 Wheaton, 235, the Supreme Court repeats that this argument of inconvenience is chimerical.

In Ex parte Nugent, American Law Journal 1848-'49, page 107, decided by the circuit court for the District of Columbia in May, 1848, and in which the attempt was made to discharge Nugent, who was in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate for contempt in refusing to answer as a witness, there is a most exhaustive collection and review of the authorities, and a decision expressed in these words in the syllabus:

"Every court, including the Senate and House of Representatives, is the sole judge of its own contempts and in cases of commitment for contempt. In such case, no other court can have a right to inquire directly into the correctness or propriety of the commitment, or to discharge the person on habeas corpus."

Fourth. Because the House has, touching contempts of its authority, the powers of the House of Commons at common law, as defined in the case of Dunn against Anderson, and because further, when it tries and decides a question of contempt it sits as a court, and its order is a judgment of a court, provable by its records or journals; therefore its orders as to a question of contempt are final, not reviewable either on habeas corpus or in any other way by any other tribunal, and they have as judgments every attribute of a judgment of every other court of supreme jurisdiction.

Cushing on Parliamentary Law, page 257, section 645, says, in treating of the incidental judicial powers of the House:

"This jurisdiction being conferred for the purpose of enabling a legislative assembly to discharge its peculiar functions in a free, independent, and intelligent manner, is in its very nature exclusive and final." (See also Kearney's case, 7 Wheaton; Kent's Commentaries, 236, note.)

Touching the extent of this implied power to punish witnesses for contempt, we affirm that imprisonment of a witness refusing to give testimony for contempt is among the implied powers of the House; that this is not an open question, being settled not only by the immemorial practice of Parliament by the uniform practice of the House, but also by the unanimous judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States.

In Anderson vs. Dunn, 6 Wheaton, 204, after the court had in that case after hearing most elaborate arguments upon an exhaustive review by the court of the whole subject of the existence of this power under the Constitution, the court reached the conclusion that the House of Representatives has jurisdiction to punish and to imprison for contempt, and they declared that any other doctrine is too wild to be suggested.

Mr. Cushing, page 402, section 1011, declares that there is no reason to doubt that the House may put a contumacious witness into close confinement.

In Cushing, page 401, section 1011, it is declared that because these commitments of contumacious witnesses are meant both for punishment and remedy, therefore "A contumacious witness is usually committed in the first instance to the custody of the sergeant-at-arms. If this fails to induce him to submit himself to the order, he may then be committed to Newgate, or some other public prison.

* * * * * * * *

"There seems no reason to doubt that the House may put a witness in close confinement."

The same author, in section 1011, says:

"When a witness refuses to answer the question which he is directed to answer, or to produce a paper or document, the proceeding against him is intended as not only a punishment for his contempt, but also to compel him to obey the order."

In Barclay's Digest, 231, it is said:

"Failure or refusal of a witness to testify is a breach of the privileges of the House, and has been punished by commitment to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, by expulsion from the floor as a reporter, and by commitment to the common jail of the District of Columbia."

He then adds a reference to the volume and pages of the journal where these commitments to the common jail are shown.

Having now ascertained by the authorities that we have cited that the powers of the House of Representatives touching the privileges of the House are derived from the Constitution of the United States; that in the execution of these powers, in assertion of the privilege of the House, the House acts and sits as a supreme court; that its decisions upon questions of contempt are exclusive and final, as the judgments of any other supreme court; and that such commitments for contempt may be, at the discretion of the House, either to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms or to the common jail; that the legal design and purpose of such commitments are not merely punishment, but also remedial, and in aid of its power to enforce the production of testimony.

We are now brought to the consideration of the only ground upon which this application for a discharge is rested. That ground we have already stated, namely, that the Congress by the law of 1857, and the recent revision thereof, has repealed its power to punish for contempt, and delegated it to the authorities of the District of Columbia. This revised statute is in these words:

"Sec. 102. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of either House of Congress to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either House or in committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the subject under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100, and imprisonment in a common jail for not less than one month nor more than twelve months.

"Sec. 103. No witness is privileged to refuse to testify to any fact or to produce any paper respecting which he shall be examined by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House, upon the ground that his testimony to such facts or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous.

"Sec. 104. Whenever a witness, summoned as mentioned in section 102, fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact, under the seal of the Senate or House, to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action."

That the enactment of this statute and the revision thereof have not repealed or modified the power of the House to punish for contempt is established by the following considerations and authorities:

First. That it is wholly incompetent for the two Houses of Congress, by law, to strip either House of any one of its constitutional prerogatives or privileges, whether such prerogative or privilege be conferred upon such House by express provision or by necessary implication. Upon the most obvious and self-evident principle is it true that an implied power can no more be legislated away from either House than can an express power. There is no express power in the Constitution anywhere given to either House to subpœna and examine witnesses in any case, and the power to examine a witness in the exercise of the House's power to present impeachments is an implied power. Can it be possible that the two Houses of Congress are competent to enact that hereafter the House of Representatives shall have no power to call or examine witnesses in the matter of presenting impeachments. If the Congress is competent to strip the House of one of its implied powers, to wit, the one to punish witnesses for contempt; then so may the Congress deprive the House of its implied powers to enforce any one of its privileges. How would an act of Congress sound which enacted that hereafter the House of Representatives shall have no power to subpœna witnesses, to punish them for contempt, or to exercise any other of its judicial and implied powers. But if Congress can strip the House of one necessary implied power, it can of all; and if it can do this, by making a district grand jury the tribunal to try whether its powers have been outraged or derided, then it can delegate that trial to a town meeting or to any other authority it may please. If it may strip the House of all its judicial powers, held for its self-preservation, by an act which hands them over to a district grand jury, then it may strip the House of these by their simple abolishment, and without constituting even a constable to try and decide when the House has become a victim of contempt.

Upon the most obvious constitutional principles, therefore, had this law of 1857 in express words attempted to deprive the House of its power to punish witnesses. It would have been simply nugatory, because that power is inalienable, and, as has been a thousand times held, absolutely indispensable to the execution of the powers of the House. But this question of the non-alienability of this power is not an open one upon authority. The Congress of 1851, in the act attempting to regulate the methods by which the House could execute its exclusive power to judge of the election of its members, laid down certain requirements as to giving notices of contests, making answers thereto, and taking and transmitting the testimony in such contests. This act, it will be observed, was not an attempt to delegate the power of the House to judge of an election, but only a regulation of the methods by which the House should be governed in reaching the actual trial and judgment. And yet, as to the binding force of that act upon the House of Representatives, it has been decided as often as the question has arisen in the House that that law, even merely attempting to regulate the methods of the proceedings of the House in a trial over which it has sole jurisdiction, is not a law. It has been held that it is but a wholesome rule, and that the House may, in its discretion, wholly disregard the law in every proceeding in the course of the contest, simply because the Congress has no power to interfere with this exclusive privilege with the House. (See Williamson vs. Sickles, 2 Election Cases, 288; Henrison vs. Davis, ibid., 241.)

Again, the same thing is in principle decided in the case of the Ohio Life Insurance and Trust Company vs. Debolt, 16 Howard, 441, where the Supreme Court says, "No one Legislature can by its own acts disarm its successor of any of the powers or the rights of sovereignty confided by the people to the legislative body, unless authorized to do so by the constitution under which it is elected. Surely no one will contend that it is any more competent for Congress to tie up by legislation the constitutional powers of a future House than it is to tie up the powers of a future Congress. The same thing is in legal principle decided, also in Ex parte Garland, 4 Wallace, 334, where it is held that the power conferred by the Constitution upon the President to grant pardons is unlimited in its operations, except in cases of impeachment, and is not subject to legislative control. Can it be successfully contended that the constitutional power of the House over impeachment, over expulsion of members, over punishments for contempt, and the like, is any more subject to be impaired by legislation than is the constitutional power of the President touching pardons? Plainly, therefore, had the Congress, by the law of 1857 and the revision thereof, expressly enacted that hereafter the House shall have no power to punish for contempt, but that such power shall be delegated to the grand jury of the District of Columbia, the act would have been wholly void.

Again, this act does not purport to strip the House of its power to punish for contempt. It contains no word or hint negativing the continuance of the power of the House to so punish. It simply declares the refusal of witnesses to answer a misdemeanor, and as a method of insuring the prosecution of this misdemeanor, it requires its certification to the District authority. To hold that this statute repeals or abolishes by implication the constitutional power of the House to punish for contempt when it has no word in it indicating that such was the purpose of the act, and when there is nothing in the act repugnant to the idea of its being still left competent for the House to punish the same act as a contempt—to hold that is violative of the established rule of construction of such statutes. Sedgwick on Statutes, page 97, states the rules in these words:

"A general statute without negative words will not repeal the particular provisions of the former one, unless the two acts are irreconcilably inconsistent."

And this is true as to the effect of a statute upon the existing common-law remedy. The old one remains, unless the act necessarily abolishes it. (See Sedgwick on Statutes, 342.)

Again, it is claimed that to punish this contumacy of a witness as to contempt and also as to misdemeanor is in violation of the Constitution, and is the infliction of a double punishment for the same act. This is plainly a mistake. The following suggestions will fully illustrate and enforce the proposition that it is a mistake: The act of February 5, 1867, (14 Statutes at Large, 385,) makes the refusal of the respondent to a writ of habeas corpus to obey the writ, or to make return, or the making of a false return, a misdemeanor. So does the act of the 2d of March, 1833. (4 Statutes at Large, 634.)

Now, will it be contended in the present case that your honor in the case now at bar has no power to punish as a contempt a refusal of the defendant to obey your order in this case, because such refusal is also indictable under the statute? The act of February 26, 1853, (10 Statutes at Large, 171,) makes it a high crime to bribe or to offer to bribe a member of Congress. Do you suppose that because this act has made the bribery of a member a high crime that therefore it is lawful, so far as a contempt of a House is concerned, to tender in the presence of the House to every member bribes for his vote during the calling of the roll, in the presence of the House, and that the House would have no power to punish that act as a contempt, because it had been made a high crime?

Again, the Constitution expressly gives the House power to punish members for disorder, and the statute makes a murder or maiming of a member of Congress by a fellow-member high crime, and will punish it as such by indictment; that such statute so making it a crime has taken from the House all power to punish the same act as disorder, when the murder was done in the presence of the House.

Again, assaults and batteries, murders, riots, and arson, frauds by attorneys, and the like, when done in the presence of the courts, are contempts of the courts; and yet these same acts are also indictable and punishable as crimes under statutes. Is it possible that because these acts have been made crimes under statutes, that therefore the same acts when done in the presence of the Houses of Congress or the courts of the country are not punishable as contempts of the courts or of the Houses?

Again, it is not at all unusual for the same act to constitute several offenses against jurisdictions or governments. In Fox vs. Ohio, 5 Howard, 410, it was held the same act of uttering of counterfeit coin of the United States may be made indictable and punishable both by State law and Federal law. But the same question came up in a celebrated case of Sam Houston, of Texas for an assault committed in the presence of the House, and he was punished by the House for contempt. He was afterward indicted and punished by the authorities of the District for the same act, and it was held that his punishment by the House was no bar to his punishment under the law of the District.

In volume 2, Opinions of the Attorneys-General, page 668, is found the following opinion, which I give in full:

"Punishment by the House of Representatives for assault and battery on the person of one of its members is no bar to an indictment and conviction in the District court for the same act."

The punishment of General Houston by the House was for a breach of privilege and for contempt of the House; the indictment and conviction were for a violation of a public law.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE, June 25, 1834.

SIR: In answer to the question submitted to me on the memorial of General Houston, who appears to have been indicted, convicted, and fined in a criminal court in this District for an assault on the person of a member of the House of Representatives, after having been previously punished by that House for the same act, as a contempt and breach of privilege, I have the honor to state that, in my opinion, the proceedings of the House constituted no bar to the subsequent indictment and conviction. The fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no person "shall be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb," does not apply to cases of this sort. Courts and other bodies which have the power to punish for contempts are invested with that power, and are supposed to employ it for the purpose of protecting themselves in a due exercise of their appropriate functions, and not for the purpose of vindicating the general law of the land, which may also have been violated by the same act. Technically, therefore, General Houston has not been twice tried for the same offense. The act committed by him was one and the same, and it constituted but one indictable offense; and he was, therefore, subject to only one conviction on indictment. But if this act was also a breach of the privileges of the House of Representatives and a contempt of the House, they had the right to punish him for the contempt independently of the action of the criminal court; and so vice versa.

I am, sir, &c.,

B. F. BUTLER.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Again, this question came before the highest court in New York, in the case of Yates vs. Lansing, decided in the court of errors of New York. (See 9 Johnson's Reports, 395.) The chancellor committed one of the officers of the court of chancery for malpractice and contempt, and the judge of the supreme court, in application on habeas corpus, discharged the prisoner, and the chancellor afterward recommitted for the same cause, and action was brought under the fifth section of the habeas corpus act against the chancellor for the penalty attached to an order of commitment for the same cause after discharge on habeas corpus. Various questions are elaborately discussed in the case, and among other questions it became material to inquire whether, where the same act was a contempt and also by statute made a crime, the conviction was a bar to proceedings for contempt, or the commitment for contempt a bar to proceedings on indictment. Upon this point Platt, Senator, on pages 216 and 217, S. P., uses the following language:

"The right of punishing for contempts by summary conviction is inherent in all courts of justice and legislative assemblies, and is essential for their protection and existence. It is a branch of the common law adopted and sanctioned by our State constitution. The discretion involved in this power is in a great measure arbitrary and undefinable, and yet experience of ages has demonstrated that it is perfectly compatible with civil liberties and an auxiliary to the purest ends of justice. The known existence of such a power prevents in a thousand instances the necessity of exerting it, and its obvious liability to abuse, is perhaps, a strong reason why it is so seldom abused.

"This power extends not only to acts which directly and openly insult or resist the powers of the court, or the persons of the judges, but to consequential, indirect, and constructive contempts, which obstruct the processes, degrade the authority, or contaminate the purity of the court."—(4 Blackstone's Commentaries, 280; 2 Hawkins, C. 2, C. 22; 1 Com. Dig., Attachment A.)

"The officers of the court are peculiarly subject to its discretionary powers, and may be punished in this summary manner for oppression, extravagant indulgence, or abuse of their official capacity.

"A contempt is an offense against the court as an organ of public justice, and a court rightfully punishes with summary conviction, and whether the same act be punishable as a crime or misdemeanor on indictment or not. To challenge a Senator or a judge may under certain circumstances be a contempt, but it is certainly indictable. A conviction on indictment will not purge the contempt, nor will a conviction for a contempt be a bar to an indictment. The offense may be double, and so are the remedy and the punishment. For instance, assaults in the presence of the court, rescues, expression of libel upon the court or its suitors relating to suits pending, forging a writ, &c., are indictable offenses, and certainly they are also contempts. Contempts are never merged in statute offenses without express words for that purpose."

Still further, the practice of the House is itself the highest possible authority on the question of the joint construction of the statute of 1857. It being confessed on all hands that this jurisdiction in punishment of contempt does belong by common and constitutional law to the two Houses, and that if it be surrendered it is only surrendered by virtue of the construction of the statute, then on such question of surrender by construction I hold that by courtesy, if not by absolute and strict law, such as that laid down in Kearney's case, 7 Wheaton, the courts will defer to and not overrule the decision of the two Houses, which have been uniform ever since this act was passed; that the act was not meant to strip the two Houses of one of their original and highest jurisdictions, even were it constitutionally competent to do so by act of Congress.

It must be remembered that this concession by the courts to the two Houses of the right to determine whether they meant to surrender a jurisdiction confessed to have been conferred upon them by the Constitution is a very different question from the one whether the Constitution has ever conferred a given subject-matter to the two Houses as one of their privileges.

Now, touching the question so elaborately argued by the learned gentleman as to whether it is a judicial question for the courts to determine whether a given subject-matter is one coming within the privileges of the House, I doubt whether the Houses have ever asserted a claim at war with the doctrine in Stockdale vs. Hansard, so earnestly commented upon on the other side. Certainly nothing has been or will be claimed in this case which is at war with the doctrine in the Hansard case. The sum total of that case, so far as the relator seeks to use it for the purposes of this case, is that the House order of publication of a libel shall not per se be a bar to the suit for libel. Who in this case has disputed that law? Who has said that should the House of Representatives order the seizure of the coach and horses of a private citizen or the British minister for the use of the Speaker of the House, such order would in itself be a defense to replevin brought by the owner for the recovery of his property? And yet this is all there is for the relator in the Hansard case. There there was no judgment of the House for contempt as there is in this.

The question whether a given subject-matter of jurisdiction is or is not one of the privileges of the Houses, is always a judicial question into which the country may look, but the confusion and danger of conflict does not lie here, but does lie rather in the matter of the true legal idea and definition of the words "subject-matter of jurisdiction." This case furnishes a good illustration of this point. The subject-matter in this case over which the House has clear jurisdiction, is the making of inquest as to the use of money to corrupt the legislation of Congress. Here the subject-matter of jurisdiction is not what shall be the character of any particular question or step resorted to in making that inquest as to this last, to wit: what question shall be asked in that inquest the decision of the House is final, and no power on earth can review and retry the question whether the House had asked a relevant or improper question. So when it came to try Irwin on the charge of contempt. Then the subject-matter was "contempt of the House," and that matter being confessedly within the House's jurisdiction, no court can review or reverse the House's judgment of contempt or decide that improper questions were asked him in adjudging upon his contempt. Hence his denial in his petition for the writ that the questions were proper ones is a wholly immaterial denial; is one that has no significance in law as applied to this case, and one that he had no power to either aver or prove as against the judgment of contempt. This is so merely because the attempt to aver and prove that improper questions were asked on his trial is an attempt to review upon the writ of habeas corpus a judgment of the House touching a subject-matter of which the House had clear jurisdiction, to wit, the subject-matter of contempt. And so are all the cases upon this point, which extend through centuries. Upon this point take, for example, the case of Murray, 1 Wilson's Reports, 299, where the court uses these words:

"They granted the writ of habeas corpus not knowing what the commitment was, but now it appears to be for a contempt of the privileges of the House of Commons. What these privileges of either house are we do not know, nor need they tell us what the contempt was, because we cannot judge of it."

Or take the case of Rex vs. Fowler, 8 Term Reports, 341. Lord Kenyon says in that case, where the commons had committed for contempt of the house: "Having seen the return, we are bound to remand the defendant to prison because the subject-matter belongs ad aliud examen."

And in the same case Gross, judge, said: "The adjudication of the house on the contempt was a conviction, and the commitment in consequence was execution." "That every court must be sole judge of its own contempts."

Or take the case of Stockdale vs. Hansard, 36 Common Law Reports, where the chief justice, Lord Denman, on page 67, expressly declares that "the privilege of committing for contempt is inherent in every deliberative body invested with authority by the constitution."

On page 69 he declares "that in respect to these privileges of the house coming within their jurisdiction, I freely admit that the courts have no right to interfere."

In Howard vs. Gosset, 10 Adolphus & Ellis, N. S., 359, 441, the court, after an elaborate consideration, held the same doctrine.

Or, on the same point, take the case of Kearney, 7 Wheaton, 243, Chief Justice Story uses these words:

"It is also to be observed that there is no question here but the commitment was made by a court of competent jurisdiction and in exercise of an unquestionable authority. The only question was, not that the court acted beyond its jurisdiction, but that it erred in its judgment of the law applicable to the case. If, then, we are to give any relief in this case, it is by a revision of the opinion of the court given in the course of a criminal trial, and thus asserting the right to control its proceedings and to take from them the conclusive effect which the law intended to give them. If this were an application for a habeas corpus after judgment, on an indictment for an offense within the jurisdiction of the circuit court, it could hardly be maintained that this court could revise such a judgment or the proceedings which led to it, or set it aside and discharge the prisoner. There is in principle no distinction between that case and the present; for if a court commits a party for contempt their adjudication is a conviction, and their commitment in consequence is execution."

And so the law was settled upon full deliberation in the case of Brass Crosby, lord mayor of London, 3 Wilson, 188. And see further the authorities there cited by Justice Story. These cases do authorize me to employ the language of Chancellor Kent touching this point, when he says "that the law laid down may be considered as indisputably acknowledged and settled; that there can be no review on habeas corpus, or otherwise, by any tribunal whatever, of the rightfulness of the judgment of the House when it has rendered a judgment of conviction for contempt, when such contempt arises in proceedings in a matter over which the House has jurisdiction."

Having now established upon principle and incontrovertible authority that no court can review the judgment of the House of Representatives upon a subject-matter within the House's jurisdiction as a question of privilege, and that the relator is in custody and under execution of such judgment, and that no act of Congress either has attempted to or could abolish, modify, or interfere with the constitutional power of the House to exclusively judge of such subject-matter, this proceeding, we submit, must be dismissed and the custody of the House no further interfered with.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 26, 1875.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MISSISSIPPI ALLUVIAL BASIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message of the President of the United States, transmitting the report of the commission of engineers appointed in compliance with the act of Congress approved June 22, 1874, to investigate and report a permanent plan for the reclamation of the alluvial basin of the Mississippi River subject to inundation.

Mr. SHERMAN. That ought to be referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALCORN. With the consent of the Senator from Ohio, I ask to have that message referred to the Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River, and printed. The report is voluminous, but very important. It is a matter of general interest to the country. I understand the Chief Engineer recommends that ten thousand copies of it be printed. It is a very valuable acquisition to science.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not know that it was in regard to the levees. I supposed it concerned the mouth of the Mississippi River. The motion to print extra copies must go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ALCORN. I move that ten thousand extra copies be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion will be referred to the Committee on Printing, and the message will be referred to the Select Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of the report of the PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PRATT presented the petition of Joseph Peach and Philemon Jones, praying to be allowed pensions for services rendered in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. OGLESBY. I present a memorial of late soldiers in the United States volunteers, citizens of Fulton County, Illinois, praying that a bounty be allowed to disabled soldiers. The petition has reference, I take it, to the bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs now pending in the Senate, and it would have a bearing upon the equalization of bounties as provided for in that bill. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, although that committee has already reported a bill for that purpose.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARVEY presented the memorial of Mary Jane Pyle, of Kansas, praying to be allowed a pension on account of the services of her husband, Jesse F. Pyle, late corporal of Company D, Eleventh Regiment Kansas Cavalry Volunteers, in the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented twenty-two petitions of citizens of Kansas, praying for the passage of House bill No. 3281, to amend an act granting aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. SCOTT presented four petitions from citizens of Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, praying for the restoration of the 10 per cent. duty taken off leading foreign products in 1872 and for the passage of the currency bill submitted by Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY providing for the issue of 3.65 convertible bonds; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, a memorial of citizens of Harrisburgh, and a memorial of citizens of Milesburgh, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee and the re-enacting of internal-revenue taxes, and asking the repeal of the law which reduced the duties on certain foreign goods 10 per cent.; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented a petition of late soldiers in the United States Volunteers, citizens of Jersey City, New Jersey, praying that a bounty be allowed to disabled soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WRIGHT. I present the resolutions of the O'Brien Grange of Patrons of Husbandry, State of Iowa, protesting against granting an extension of time for the completion of the McGregor and Sioux City Railroad, setting forth that such extension would be palpably unjust to the settlers along and near the line of said proposed road. I move the reference of these resolutions to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I also present a memorial and remonstrance adopted at a meeting of citizens of the District of Columbia, held at Lincoln Hall on the 11th of January, 1875, against the passage of Senate bill No. 963, known as the bill reported from the select committee for the government of the District of Columbia, setting forth at length the objections to said bill. I move its reference to the select committee which reported the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the memorial and joint resolution of the territorial Legislature of Dakota, asking Congress for a grant of land for the right of way, and not exceeding four sections of land for each ten miles for stations, timber culture, &c., to aid in the construction of railroads in Dakota Territory, from Beloit, Iowa, by Canton and Sioux Falls, to Fargo and Pembina; also from Sheldon, Iowa, via Canton, to the Missouri River, at or near Brule City; also from Yankton, via Beloit, to a connection with the Saint Paul Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the affidavit of Julius A. Pickering, in support of his petition for the extension of his patent for a bootstrap; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a petition signed by many residents of Plattsburgh, New York, setting forth the condition of things touching wages and the depression of industry, and remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee, and suggesting other modes of increasing revenue. I present a like petition signed by many residents of Altona, New York, and a similar petition signed by citizens of Mooers, in the State of New York, and move the reference of each to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I also present joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New York, touching the improvement of the Harlem River and Spuyten Duyvil Creek, from North to East River, through the Harlem Kills. I suppose under the rules these resolutions ought to be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN ASSEMBLY,
Albany, January 15, 1875.

On motion of Mr. Smith,

Whereas the commercial interests of the whole country, and especially of the city and State of New York, demand the early improvement of Harlem River and Spuyten Duyvil Creek, from the North River to the East River, through the Harlem Kills, so as to afford a safe and convenient channel for vessels of all classes navigating the North River and bound for ports on the East River, Long Island Sound, and in the Eastern States, thus shortening the distance of the travel between the North River and the waters of the Sound, and of a large portion of the city of Brooklyn lying on the East River, and between the North River and the Eastern States by more than twenty miles around the Battery; of the tedious, expensive, and unsafe navigation of the waters that skirt the city, and thus avoiding the dangerous passage through Hell Gate: Therefore,

Resolved, (if the Senate concur,) That our senators and representatives in Congress be requested to use their influence for an early appropriation of the amount necessary and requisite for such improvements.

By order:

HIRAM CALKINS, Clerk.

IN SENATE, January 18, 1875.

Concurred in without amendment.

By order:

HENRY A. GLIDDEN, Clerk.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Horace W. Peaselee, of the town of Chatham, Columbia County, New York, praying for the extension of letters-patent granted to him for an improvement in machinery for washing paper-stock; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. WASHBURN presented the petition of the heirs of Ebenezer Babcock, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. PRATT. I submit the following order:

Ordered, That Hiram R. Rhea be allowed to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has there been an adverse report?

Mr. PRATT. The gentleman who requests me to ask for this order says that there has been no adverse report, but that his object in withdrawing his papers is for the purpose of presenting them before the War Department. I have a general recollection of the case; that it was an application for a pension, and that the committee reported favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be entered.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That Wesley Hensley be allowed to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Messrs. Gelatt & Moore be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 765) for the relief of Amos B. Ferguson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3004) for the relief of John C. Griffin, late second lieutenant Third Regiment East Tennessee Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

No. 454) to authorize the Attorney-General to adjust the claim of the Government upon the purchasers of property at Harper's Ferry, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed, and recommended the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the bill be placed upon the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) That order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1030) limiting the time in which applications for bounty lands shall be received and disposing of suspended cases after a certain date, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Black Beaver, praying payment for services as a guide to United States troops during the late rebellion, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John Pilmer, late of Company H, Ninth Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, praying to have the charge of desertion removed and that he be allowed his pay and allowances withheld on account of the unjust charge of desertion, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Michigan, late soldiers in the First Regiment Michigan Cavalry, praying the passage of a law authorizing the granting to them of honorable discharges from the service, back pay, and bounty, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. KELLY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2419) to provide for the construction of military roads in Arizona, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Duane M. Greene, late captain of Company E, Sixth Regiment California Volunteers, praying compensation for services rendered between the date of his commission and the date of his being mustered into the United States service, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 3825) to amend the national-bank act and fixing the compensation of national-bank examiners; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 471) providing for the survey and disposal of the timber lands of the United States, reported it with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2901) granting a pension to John Hendrie, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3724) granting a pension to Michael Quarry, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3702) granting a pension to Alice Roper, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3714) granting a pension to Moses B. Hardin, guardian of minors of Stanley Smith, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 1760) to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PRATT. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 985) to provide that all pensions on account of death, wounds received, or disease contracted in the service of the United States since March 4, 1861, which have been granted, or which shall hereafter be granted, on application filed previous to January 1, 1875, shall commence from the date of death or discharge, and for the payment of the arrears of pensions, to report the same adversely. There is no written report, but I desire to say that on correspondence with the Pension Office the committee learned that it would require upward of $9,000,000 to meet the requisitions of this bill. The letter of the Commissioner was written some months since, and it is probable that that would be increased to $10,000,000 now. There are undoubtedly individual cases where it would be eminently proper that arrears of pension should be granted, as for example where, on account of excusable neglect, or accident, or mistake, the application has not been made within the period of five years fixed by the general law. Sometimes the case has been delayed in the Pension Office on account of the neglect of agents or attorneys, or by the difficulty in obtaining the required proofs, in consequence of which arrears of pension have been lost. There are, as I have said, individual cases no doubt in great number where it would be eminently proper that these arrears should be paid; but this is a general bill and provides for arrears in all cases—a proposition few would consent to. For economic reasons, as well as others, the committee think that a bill of this kind should not be entertained at the present time. I therefore move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2724) for the relief of certain States and Territories on account of ordnance stores issued to them during the late civil war, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 17) authorizing the appointment of a commissioner to an international penitentiary congress, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1191) to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1192) for the relief of the former occupants of the present military reservation at Point San José, in the city and county of San Francisco; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WASHBURN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1193) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the schooner Matilda; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1194) granting right of way to the San Pete Valley Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1195) for the removal of certain bands of Indians from the Coast Range Indian reservation in Oregon, now known as Siletz and Alsea reservations, and their establishment on a portion thereof; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1196) making an appropriation for the improvement of the military wagon-road from Scottsburgh, Oregon, to Camp Stewart, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1197) to aid in the construction of the Southern Maryland Railroad, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1198) authorizing the President to nominate Henry S. Wetmore a lieutenant in the Navy upon the retired list; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

JOHN A. CARR.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested, if not incompatible with the public service, to furnish the Senate at the earliest practicable moment all information within the knowledge of his Department relative to the arrest and imprisonment by military authority, in the fall of 1874, of John A. Carr, a United States customs officer in Alaska; and that said Secretary be further requested to state the length of time said Carr was restrained of his liberty, if at all, in what manner, at what particular place or places both within the jurisdiction of the United States and on the high seas, and for what purpose, and upon what authority of law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that resolution had better go to the Committee on Military Affairs in the first instance for inquiry. There may be circumstances when it would not be proper to make public all the particulars connected with the arrest of a deserter or whoever it may be; and as this resolution calls for so much and assumes so much, I think it had better be referred to the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 4528) amendatory of the act approved March 3, 1873, entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri;" and

A bill (H. R. No. 4538) further supplemental to the various acts prescribing the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested elections.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 3006) authorizing the President to nominate Holmes Wickoff an assistant surgeon in the Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 4462) for the relief of Alexander Burtch; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3572) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes.

VIENNA EXPOSITION REPORTS.

Mr. SARGENT. On Friday last (this being within the time in which a reconsideration may be moved) I offered a resolution requesting the Secretary of State to furnish certain reports of commissioners to the Vienna exposition to the Senate. On examination of those reports and understanding more fully the circumstances, I am satisfied that some of them at any rate should be edited before they are sent in. I therefore move to reconsider the vote adopting the resolution which I then offered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I now move that the resolution lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS.) If there be no further resolutions, the morning business having been completed, the Chair will call on the Committee on the Judiciary for bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that this committee, like the Committee on Naval Affairs yesterday, may have not to exceed an hour from this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears none.

APPEALS TO THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call up Senate bill No. 1076.

The bill (S. No. 1076) to facilitate the disposition of cases in the Supreme Court of the United States, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section provides that the circuit court of the United States, in deciding causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction on the instance side of the court, shall find the facts and the conclusions of law upon which it renders its judgments or decrees, and shall state the facts and conclusions of law separately. The review of the judgments and decrees entered upon such findings by the Supreme Court, upon appeal, shall be limited to a determination of the sufficiency of the facts found to support the judgments or decrees entered, and to such rulings of the circuit court, excepted to at the time, as may be presented by a bill of exceptions, prepared as in actions at law.

Section 2 provides that whenever, by the laws now in force, it is required that the matter in dispute shall exceed the sum or value of $2,000, exclusive of costs, in order that the judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of the United States may be re-examined in the Supreme Court, such judgments and decrees hereafter rendered shall not be re-examined in the Supreme Court unless the matter in dispute shall exceed the sum or value of $5,000, exclusive of costs.

Section 3 declares that the act shall take effect on the 1st day of May, 1875.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was to insert, after the word "separately," in section 1, line 7, the following words:

And in finding the facts, as before provided, said court may, upon the consent of the parties who shall have appeared and put any matter of fact in issue, and subject to such general rules in the premises as shall be made and provided from time to time, impanel a jury of not less than five and not more than twelve persons, to whom shall be submitted the issues of fact in such cause, under the direction of the court, as in cases at common law. And the finding of such jury, unless set aside for lawful cause, shall be entered of record, and stand as the finding of the court, upon which judgment shall be entered according to law.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the committee, as to the limitation of the right to appeal to suits embracing $5,000. Does it embrace all appeals in admiralty?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It embraces precisely the character of appeals that are now embraced within the existing statutes limited by $2,000. It does not change the rule of appeal; but wherever $2,000 is now the limit as fixed by the act of 1789, it is now made $5,000.

Mr. BAYARD. I am aware that the act of 1789 fixed the amount at $2,000. I dislike to criticise the action of a committee which is generally so carefully conducted; but it did strike me that in admiralty suits there probably would be reasons why the amount to justify an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States should be somewhat less than in other suits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out in section 1, lines 20 and 21, the words "sufficient of the facts found to support the judgments or decrees entered," and in lieu threof to insert "questions of law arising upon the record;" so as to read:

The review of the judgments and decrees entered upon such findings by the Supreme Court, upon appeal, shall be limited to a determination of the questions of law arising upon the record, and to such rulings of the circuit court, excepted to at the time, as may be presented by a bill of exceptions, prepared as in actions at law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the committee was to insert the following as a new section, to come in after section 1:

SEC. 2. That said courts, when sitting in equity for the trial of patent causes, may impanel a jury of not less than five and not more than twelve persons, subject to such general rules in the premises as may, from time to time, be made by the Supreme Court, and submit to them such questions of fact arising in such cause as such circuit court shall deem expedient; and the verdict of such jury shall be treated and proceeded upon in the same manner and with the same effect as in the case of issues sent from chancery to a court of law and returned with such findings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEES OF CLERKS AND MARSHALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now call up House bill No. 3623.

The bill (H. R. No. 3623) to amend the twenty-third paragraph of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to amend the twenty-third paragraph of section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved February 26, 1853," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed to amend the bill by striking out in section 1 the first paragraph, commencing in line 3 and ending in line 8, as follows:

That the twenty-third paragraph of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, be amended so as to read as follows.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 24 of section 1, to strike out the word "it," before the word "may," and after the word "may" to strike out the words "or may not regard the same proved and justified by law" and insert "be according to law and just;" so as to read:

And the court shall thereupon cause to be entered of record an order approving or disapproving the account, as may be according to law, and just.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "court," in line 29 of section 1, to insert "and the court shall pass upon the same in the manner aforesaid;" so as to read:

United States commissioners shall forward their accounts, duly verified by oath, to the district attorneys of their respective districts, by whom they shall be submitted for approval in open court, and the court shall pass upon the same in the manner aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the word "clerks" before "marshals," in line 31, and after "marshals" to insert "and district attorneys;" so as to read:

Accounts and vouchers of clerks, marshals, and district attorneys shall be made in duplicate, to be marked, respectively, "original" and "duplicate;" and it shall be the duty of the clerk to forward the original accounts and vouchers of the officers above specified, when approved, to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, line 3, before the word "marshal," to insert the words "clerk or;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That whenever the business of the courts in any judicial district shall make it necessary, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, for the clerk or marshal to furnish greater security than the official bond now required by law, a bond in a sum not to exceed $40,000 shall be given when required by the Attorney-General, who shall fix the amount thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following additional sections:

SEC. 3. That the clerks of the Supreme Court and the circuit and district courts, respectively, shall each, before he enters upon the execution of his office, give bond, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the court for which he is appointed, to the United States, in the sum of not less than five, and more than twenty thousand dollars, to be determined and regulated by the Attorney-General of the United States, faithfully to discharge the duties of his office and seasonably to record the decrees, judgments, and determinations of the court of which he is clerk; and it shall be the duty of the district attorneys of the United States, upon requirement by the Attorney-General, to give thirty days' notice of motion in their several courts that new bonds, in accordance with the terms of this act, are required to be executed; and upon failure of any clerk to execute such new bonds, his office shall be deemed vacant. The Attorney-General may at any time, upon like notice through the district attorney, require a bond of increased amount, in his discretion, from any of said clerks within the limit of the amount above specified; and the failure of the clerk to execute the same shall in like manner vacate his office. All bonds given by the clerks shall, after approval, be recorded in their respective offices, and copies thereof from the records, certified by the clerks respectively under seal of court, shall be competent evidence in any court. The original bonds shall be filed in the Department of Justice.

SEC. 4. That the circuit courts of the United States, for the purposes of this act, shall have power to award the writ of mandamus, according to the course of the common law, upon motion of the Attorney-General or the district attorney of the United States, to any officer thereof, to compel him to make the returns and perform the duties in this act required.

SEC. 5. That if any clerk of any district or circuit court of the United States shall willfully refuse or neglect to make any report, certificate, statement, or other document required by law to be by him made, or shall willfully refuse or neglect to forward any such report, certificate, statement, or document to the department, officer, or person to whom, by law, the same should be forwarded, the President of the United States is empowered, and it is hereby made his duty, in every such case, to remove such clerk so offending from office by an order in writing for that purpose. And upon the presentation of such order, or a copy thereof, authenticated by the Attorney-General of the United States, to the judge of the court whereof such offender is clerk, such clerk shall thereupon be deemed to be out of office, and shall not exercise the functions thereof. And such district judge, in the case of the clerk of a district court, shall appoint a successor; and in the case of the clerk of a circuit court, the circuit judge shall appoint a successor. And such person so removed shall not be eligible to any appointment as clerk or deputy clerk for the period of two years next after such removal.

SEC. 6. That if any clerk mentioned in the preceding section shall willfully refuse or neglect to make or to forward any such report, certificate, statement, or document therein mentioned, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, in the discretion of the court; but a conviction under this section shall not be necessary as a condition precedent to the removal from office provided for in this act.

SEC. 7. That the proviso in the sixth paragraph of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1874, shall not be construed to apply or to have applied to attorneys, marshals, or clerks of courts of the United States, their assistants or deputies. And all accounts of said attorneys, marshals, and clerks, for mileage and for expenses incurred subsequent to the 1st day of July, 1874, shall and may be audited, allowed, and paid at the Treasury Department of the United States in the same manner as if said act had not been passed. And hereafter no allowance shall be made to any such officer or person for mileage or travel not actually performed under the provisions of existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Vermont. As these bills come from the committee and are not readily at hand, I am not able to follow them as I should like otherwise to do; but I observe in the latter part of this bill as read by the Clerk an exemption from the general rule of auditing the costs of mileage. Will the Senator be kind enough to explain in what that exemption consists and how special provision in regard to these costs is made?

Mr. EDMUNDS. By the act of 1853 marshals, &c., were allowed mileage for the travel which they performed in serving process and in going to and returning from court, which is a large part of the means they have of living or getting any emoluments from the office. By an act of last year in the military appropriation bill there was provided a clause, as it was said, intended to apply to officers of the Army alone, which declared that they should only have their actual expenses instead of an allowance for mileage. That was construed at the Treasury as applying to marshals and officers of courts, so that they should have only their actual expenses, the result of which is to strip all the marshals and district attorneys, so far as their mileage is concerned, (and as to marshals that is about all there is of it,) of all compensation whatever except for their actual expenses, so that they receive nothing for their time. It is to correct that that this provision is made, and we put it back upon exactly the footing where it stood under the act of 1853, and which was not designed to have been altered. Then we provide what the act of 1853 I think fairly does provide; but there has grown up some doubt about it, that no allowance shall be made to any such officer for mileage or travel not actually performed, so as to make it impossible to have any constructive mileage.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask also whether the system of constructive fees, which has been so abused in many of the districts, notably in the western district of Arkansas, is affected at all?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is cut up by this in express terms.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The title of that bill should be changed so as to read, "A bill regulating costs and fees, and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

DISTRICT JUDGE OF VERMONT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call up next Senate bill No. 1012.

The bill (S. No. 1012) for the relief of the district judge of Vermont, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. As the present incumbent of the office of district judge for the district of Vermont is incapacitated by sickness and paralysis from performing the duties of his office, which incapacity is believed to be permanent, the bill provides that, the resignation of the district judge for the district of Vermont being tendered and accepted by the President of the United States, the salary now received by that judge shall be continued to him during his natural life, payable in the same manner and form as if he actually performed the duties of his office.

Mr. BOGY. This bill makes a change in regard to the compensation of judges, and I should like the Senator from Vermont to explain the reason why. Do we intend to pension off all the judges when they resign? If you make a law for the judge in Vermont, it must be made for the judges of the United States generally. We have an old man in my State who has been a very faithful judge for a great many years, and perhaps he would like to retire too. I cannot see why an exception should be made in favor of the judge in Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill was reported by my honorable friend the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. STEVENSON,] who will, no doubt, render the explanation to the Senator from Missouri that he desires.

Mr. STEVENSON. This is a special bill for the benefit of the district judge of Vermont, who has been a long time on the bench and is known to be one of the most competent and able of the district judges. He has been stricken with paralysis, and it is necessary that some provision should be made for the discharge of the public duty of his position. Therefore it is proposed to allow him to retire as in the case of a supreme judge and continue to him his compensation. He has been on the bench a great many years, perhaps fifteen or more; the Senator from Vermont knows better the extent of his service than I do. The same provision, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, applies to a supreme judge. It is true that some of the Senators on the committee thought there ought to be a general bill. I myself opposed that proposition. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." It would be difficult at times to ascertain what disability would be necessary in order to allow a judge to retire. You would have to have some board, perhaps, by which this disability should be tested and should be tried. That might or might not be always advisable, and I, expressing only the opinion of myself, thought it best that we should allow each case to stand on its respective merits, that the committee itself and Congress should ascertain the extent of the disability, the extent of the malady, or the accident by which the incapacity to discharge judicial labor was caused, and the permanence of the disability. Therefore I think it entirely proper that this bill should pass, and not merely because of this worthy and upright judge, who is now physically disabled—I will not say mentally, though I have no doubt his mind is affected by paralysis. Instead of a general bill, the same meed of justice which is sought here can in cases similar to this be afforded; and we shall reach it better by referring each individual case as it arises to Congress than we shall if we have a general board, with power to decide upon the incapacity of a judge when he may be so disabled as not to be able to perform judicial labor. That is the extent of this bill, and no more.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would only add that there were a number of members of the committee who thought there ought to be a general bill, and I suppose it is not improper for me say that the Senator from Vermont was one of those; but the majority of the committee thought that to pass a general bill would be an invitation to disabilities, and that, instead of the tribunal selected (which would probably be the Supreme Court of the United States or possibly the President) to determine whether the disability was such as should entitle one to relief, that adjudication could be better made by Congress and by the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives than in any other mode. That was the conclusion which, after a great deal of reflection, a majority of the committee arrived at.

Mr. BOGY. Though I am inclined to vote against this bill, there is no reason why I should oppose this judge in Vermont because he is in Vermont; but I am opposed to it on principle. It is a new departure in favor of pensioning the judiciary. If that be the intention of the committee, a general bill ought to be proposed; and if it be not, I am not prepared to say that this gentleman occupies a position different from any other judge now on the bench in the United States. It does not appear that this man has been a very long time on the bench, ten or fifteen years, it is said. I know judges who have been twice as long on the bench. The fact that he may have been a very good judge and the fact that he may be suffering from disease now—all these facts put together do not justify a departure of this serious nature.

This will lead to the pensioning of the judges of the district courts throughout the United States. If that be the intention, let there be a general bill at once, and let the country know the fact that it is the design of Congress to increase the pension-list, which has heretofore been confined to the Army, and hereafter to extend it to the judges of the courts, and then after awhile it will be extended to somebody else, and so on, for there is no limit to it. This bill involves a very great principle. It is rather ungracious to oppose it on account of the fact that this gentleman is said to be afflicted with disease, but it does involve a principle of sufficient importance to justify me in protesting against its passage. I do not think a bill of this nature ought to pass under the circumstances.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My own opinion was in concurrence with the opinion expressed by the Senator from Missouri respecting having a general provision; but a majority of the gentlemen of the committee thought otherwise, and they certainly had very strong reasons for their opinion, which have been so well stated. This is not a new departure, as the Senator from Missouri seems to suppose, for in the case of one or two western and southwestern judges this identical provision has been made where the judge, a worthy person, had served for a considerable period of time and had become wholly incapacitated to perform the duties by permanent sickness, or as in this case by permanent paralysis. This gentleman is about sixty-five years old. In five years under existing laws he will be entitled to retire and to continue to receive his pay; but during these five years the wheels of justice must be greatly impeded unless he chooses to give up a life office where he has worn himself out in the service, and thereby deprive himself of the means of support. That is the statement of the case. Judge Smalley was appointed by President Pierce during his administration. It must have been in 1853 or 1854, if I recollect aright.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Allow me to suggest that I think we had a case in point in Texas in the instance of Judge Watrous.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There was one case in Texas, and there are two others; so that it is not a matter of new impression. As I say, my own opinion is that a general bill would be better; but the committee thought otherwise, and have reported this bill, and I hope the Senator from Missouri will allow it to pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDEBTEDNESS OF SOUTHERN RAILROADS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senate now to take up House bill No. 1938.

The bill (H. R. No. 1938) to extend the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of debts due from southern railroads, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment to strike out the preamble and all after the enacting clause, and in lieu of the matter stricken out to insert:

That the Secretary of War and Attorney-General are hereby authorized and empowered jointly to adjust and settle the claims of the United States against the Alexandria, Loudon and Hampshire, the Edgefield and Kentucky, the Knoxville and Kentucky, the McMinnville and Manchester, the Mobile and Ohio, the Memphis, Clarksville and Linnville, the Memphis and Little Rock, the Nashville and Northwestern, the Southwestern Branch Pacific Railroad of Missouri, and the Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad Companies, and all persons and corporations having any interest in the subject growing out of the sale and transfer by the United States of any rights or property to said railway companies above named respectively, in the years 1865 and 1866, or both, by making such abatement in the amount of such claims respectively as shall be deemed just, in respect of an overvaluation, if any, of the property sold, not exceeding 25 per cent. of the valuation of the property in each case, as made under the authority of the War Department on the occasion of such sales: Provided, That such settlements shall be made within one year next after the passage of this act; and that good and sufficient security be given to the United States, by or on behalf of the parties in interest respectively, who do not pay in cash at the time of settlement, for the payment with interest, of such sums as shall, on such settlements, be so found due at such times within ten years as may be agreed upon.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not be construed so as to produce or authorize any delay in the prosecution of said claims respectively other than as aforesaid; and each of said claims not so settled and disposed of as aforesaid shall be prosecuted and enforced according to existing obligations. In such settlements no allowance shall be made in respect of any matter occurring prior to such sales and transfers, nor otherwise, except such payments as may have been made in cash and such credits for transportation as the general course of the business regulations of the Departments authorizes. And in any such settlement, the said Secretary and Attorney-General shall, as a condition thereof, take a full release from the other parties, respectively, of all claims and demands, of every name and nature, theretofore existing, if any such there be, against the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed. Its title was amended to read: "A bill to provide for settlements with certain railway companies."

DEBTS DUE THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now call up House bill No. 2080.

The bill (H. R. No. 2080) to provide for deducting any debt due the United States from any judgment recovered against the United States by such debtor was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, which was to insert after the words "United States," in lines 3 and 4, the words "or other claim duly allowed by legal authority;" in line 6, after the word "plaintiff," to insert the words "or claimant;" in line 9, after the word "judgment," to insert the words "or claim;" in line 10, after the word "plaintiff," to insert the words "or claimant;" in line 11, after the word "judgment," to insert the words "or an amount thereof equal to said debt or claim;" in line 14, after the word "plaintiff," to insert the words "or claimant;" in line 17, after the word "judgment," to insert the words "or claim;" in line 19 to strike out the words "such claim" and insert the words "the debt of the United States;" so as to make the bill read:

That when any final judgment recovered against the United States, or other claim duly allowed by legal authority, shall be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment, and the plaintiff, or claimant, therein shall be indebted to the United States in any manner, whether as principal or surety, it shall be the duty of the Secretary to withhold payment of an amount of such judgment, or claim, equal to the debt thus due to the United States; and if such plaintiff, or claimant, assents to such set-off, and discharges his judgment, or an amount thereof equal to said debt or claim, the Secretary shall execute a discharge of the debt due from the plaintiff to the United States. But if such plaintiff, or claimant, denies his indebtedness to the United States, or refuses to consent to the set-off, then the Secretary shall withhold payment of such further amount of such judgment, or claim, as in his opinion will be sufficient to cover all legal charges and costs in prosecuting the debt of the United States to final judgment. And if such debt is not already in suit, it shall be the duty of the Secretary to cause legal proceedings to be immediately commenced to enforce the same, and to cause the same to be prosecuted to final judgment with all reasonable dispatch. And if in such action judgment shall be rendered against the United States, or the amount recovered for debt and costs shall be less than the amount so withheld, as before provided, the balance shall then be paid over to such plaintiff by such Secretary, with 6 per cent. interest thereon for the time it has been withheld from the plaintiff.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PUNISHMENT OF MANSLAUGHTER.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now call up House bill No. 1593.

The bill (H. R. No. 1593) relating to the punishment of the crime of manslaughter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that whoever shall hereafter be convicted of the crime of manslaughter, in any court of the United States, in any State or Territory, including the District of Columbia, shall be imprisoned not exceeding twenty years and fined not exceeding $1,000; but this act is not to affect or apply to any prosecution now pending or the prosecution of any offense already committed.

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed to amend the bill by striking out in line 6 the word "twenty" and inserting "ten," so as to read "not exceeding ten years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the bill be laid aside informally for a moment. It has been suggested that there should be an additional saving clause. The bill was not reported by me, but by the Senator from Ohio. The suggestion is that perhaps there ought to be a saving clause to provide for offenses already committed being punished according to existing laws, inasmuch as this act does not apply to offenses already committed and repeals all inconsistent acts.

Mr. THURMAN. That might be necessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will draw up a provision of that kind we can pass the bill in a moment.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest to the Senator that this bill repeals all prior laws.

Mr. THURMAN. It is very true there ought to be that saving clause. I wish the chairman would draw it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will send it to the gentleman who reported the bill to draw it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside for the present.

Mr. THURMAN subsequently said: I ask the Senate now to return to the consideration of House bill No. 1593. I wish to move a proviso to the last section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1593) relating to the punishment of the crime of manslaughter, and the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to insert at the end of section 2 the following:

Provided, however, That said acts shall remain in force for the punishment of all persons who have heretofore committed the crime of manslaughter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. ANDERSON.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I next call up Senate bill No. 1147.

The bill (S. No. 1147) for the relief of Courtland Parker, as administrator of George W. Anderson, deceased, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It instructs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Courtland Parker, as administrator of George W. Anderson, the sum of $13,254.67, being the amount received into the Treasury of the United States, under certain proceedings and decree in the southern district of New York, undertaking to condemn the stock and dividends of Anderson in the Minnesota Mining Company, the Rockland Mining Company, the Superior Mining Company, and the Steel River Mining Company, the same being in full for all claims and demands of Parker as administrator, or the heirs or representatives of the estate, against the United States, connected with or in any manner growing out of the claim, for which a receipt is to be taken in full by the proper officer of the Treasury.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest that instead of the word "instructed," in the third line, the words "be authorized and directed," as is the usual language in such bills, be inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. In the eighth line the word "decree" should be "decrees," in the plural.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That verbal correction will be made, if there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN TEXAS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now ask for the consideration of Senate bill No. 736.

The bill (S. No. 736) to change the boundaries of the eastern and western judicial districts of the State of Texas, and to fix the times and places of holding courts in the same, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by inserting a section to precede section 11, in these words, merely to cover a possibility:

Whenever defendants reside in more than one of any of the counties named in this act, process against them may be returnable at the places fixed for the county where either resides.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas, subsequently moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and the motion was entered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3880) amendatory of the act of June 22, 1874, relating to bankruptcy;

A bill (H. R. No. 1342) declaratory of the rights of such Mexican citizens as were established in Territories acquired from Mexico by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Gadsden treaty and who have since continued to reside within the limits of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4531) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874.

ASSIGNMENT OF TERRITORIAL JUDGES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now ask to have taken up House bill No. 1393.

The bill (H. R. No. 1393) providing for the assignment of judges in the Territories was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof insert the following:

That the judges of the supreme court of the respective Territories, except Utah, or a majority of them, shall, at the first regular or adjourned term of said supreme court, after the passage and approval of this act, and annually thereafter, if expedient, fix the boundaries of the respective districts, and appoint the times and places of holding courts therein, and designate the judges respectively who shall hold the same: Provided, That in case of a failure in any of the said Territories so to fix the districts and make such assignments, the Legislature of said Territory shall fix said districts and make such assignment, to continue till the judges, or a majority of them, shall change the same.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill to and including the word "Territory" in line 6——

Mr. WRIGHT. That is an amendment to the original bill, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on the Judiciary report an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. SARGENT. I think my amendment is in order. The committee propose in effect to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert a certain amendment. I propose my amendment in lieu of that reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator proposes to amend the bill which the committee move to strike out, it is in order.

Mr. WRIGHT. As an amendment to the original bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order, by way of perfecting the bill before the vote is taken on striking it out. The amendment of the Senator from California will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the bill by striking out—

That the Legislature of each of the organized Territories of the United States, except the Territory of Utah, shall at each regular session thereof make an assignment of the judges to hold the courts in the several districts in such Territory.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Legislature of each of the organized Territories of the United States, except the Territory of Utah, shall at its first regular session after the passage of this act, and thereafter at any regular session, if expedient, fix the judicial districts of said Territory, appoint the times and places of holding court therein, and designate the judges, respectively, who shall hold the same.

Mr. SARGENT. The time allowed to the Committee on the Judiciary has so very nearly expired, that I suppose any prolonged debate on this bill will prevent action upon it at the present time; but this proposition has been controverted heretofore. It was brought forward at the last session, and after a very extended debate on the part of members of the committee and of Senators who differed with the conclusions of the committee, the bill was recommitted to the committee, and now comes back to us in the form it stood at the time of the recommittal, if I am not in error.

It proposes that the power be taken away from the Legislature in the Territories where that power now resides and be conferred on the judges, and in some other Territories, a little less than half of them, where it is now exercised by the judges, that the power shall be continued in them. There are five Territories of the United States where the power is exercised by the Legislature, and so far as I know—and I have talked with all the Delegates, I believe, on this matter—the power is exercised carefully and to the satisfaction of the people. In three of the Territories it is exercised by the judges. In one of the Territories, in Utah, which is exceptional in a great many respects, it is exercised by the governor of the Territory.

Now, it is proposed that the rule shall be made imperative which applies at present to a minority of these Territories, that the power shall be taken away from the Legislature and conferred on the judges. What sort of representations may have been made to the committee which should lead them to deprive the majority of the Territories of the privilege, as they esteem it, which they now have, to conform them to a rule which is now applied only to the minority, I know not; but I do know that from that source from which we ordinarily derive information of the interest of the Territories—I refer to the Delegates, who as a body are very intelligent men—we receive other representations. At the last session the Delegates from nearly every one of the Territories came to me and said that the people of their Territories desired that this power should reside in the Legislature. As a matter of principle, it seems to me that the power of fixing the boundaries of districts and of naming the place within those districts where courts shall be held should be in the local Legislature, and therefore that these territorial Delegates are right. The Supreme Court of the United States has no power to fix the boundaries of districts or the place within those districts where courts shall be held, and yet a power greater than that conferred on the Supreme Court is to be given to those territorial judges. Why should it be?

As was well said in the debate when this bill was under consideration before, there are favorite spots in the Territories, desirable places in the Territories for judges, and there are places which are not favorite or which are not desirable for places of residence. There are places where there is great business carried on, where there are considerable communities, where large mining operations are carried on; and I might instance such places, although not an exact illustration, as Cottonwood Cañon, in Utah Territory, where there is a very large mining business carried on and a large laboring population. In other words, there are places in the Territories where there are gathered together large bodies of men with large property interests where courts ought to be held, but that are not desirable as places of residence. It is difficult to get any comforts of life in them, and judges and people of pleasure do not like to go to them and live there; and they will not select such places, the people complain, for holding courts, but they hold courts at places remote, where it is easier to live, and witnesses at great cost to themselves and great injury to suitors are carried a long distance in order to attend courts at inconvenient places simply because those places are more suitable to the tastes of the judges as places of residence.

These difficulties arise, and the Delegates say that the Legislature being near the people will consult the wishes of the people of the Territories and that they will determine whether the interests of the community require that courts shall be held at particular places rather than the convenience of the judges——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

SELF-GOVERNMENT IN LOUISIANA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution submitted by Mr. SCHURZ on the 8th instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire what legislation by Congress is necessary to secure to the people of the State of Louisiana their rights of self-government under the Constitution, and to report with the least possible delay by bill or otherwise.

Mr. PEASE resumed and said:

Mr. President, I now proceed to examine some of the statements that were presented to the Senate in the speech of my honorable friend from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] The Senator stated upon "his honor as a gentleman, a Senator, and a man," that the people of Georgia are loyal to the United States. They have no war to make upon the United States. Well, sir, grant that they are loyal, does that entitle them to any special merit? One would suppose, from the Senator's earnest manner in reminding the Senate and the American people of the present loyal attitude of the people of Georgia—"my people," as he denominates them; I suppose he refers to the white people, an oligarchy of twenty thousand slave-holders who have managed and controlled affairs in Georgia for one hundred years—that he thought this entitled them to some special consideration and sympathy. That was the impression that I received from the protestations of the Senator. Sir, loyalty is a good thing; patriotism is commendable; to love one's country and respect its flag is a good thing; but when a people have to protest their loyalty in order to give it currency, it presents at least some grounds for suspicion or doubt as to its genuineness.

"The lady doth protest too much, methinks."

Now, sir, as to the loyal attitude of the secession democracy of Georgia——

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, my only reply is that I did not say anything of that sort at all.

Mr. PEASE. In reply to that feature of the Senator's speech as to the real loyalty that actuates the hearts of the class of people that he presented to us, I simply refer to one fact which occurred within a few months in that State, and I presume it will not be denied by the Senator, for it is notorious that in the organization of the militia in many portions of that State the companies that were organized under the law passed in 1873 absolutely refused to carry the American flag. I have here a petition which has been presented to Congress, signed by numerous persons living in Georgia, and I desire to read from certain portions of it:

The State of Georgia has received from the United States since the close of the late war 1,180 breech-loading rifle-muskets, 870 rifle-muskets, 520 pistols, 500 cavalry sabers, 5 light 12-pounder bronze guns, and 50 non-commissioned officers' swords with accouterments, cartridges, &c., amounting in all to the value of $64,105.38.

I understood the honorable Senator to say, in relation to this matter of arms in the hands of the people of the South, and particularly of Georgia, that not one white man in a hundred was armed now who was armed before the war. I venture the assertion that prior to the war they had no such armed and equipped militia as is set forth in the petition just read. I will add that, unless the people of Georgia are different from the white people in the vicinity where I reside, the men who are not armed are the exception to the rule. The carrying of concealed weapons is the crying evil of the whole southern country.

I quote further from this petition:

The governor has distributed them as follows: To 21 white companies 1,180 breech-loading rifled muskets; to 14 white companies 700 rifled muskets; to 10 white companies 410 pistols and 410 sabers; and to white companies 5 light 12-pounder bronze guns; to 3 colored companies but 150 rifled muskets. It will be seen that 45 white companies have been armed with muskets, pistols, and sabers, and that but three colored companies have been armed; that the breech-loading rifled muskets, pistols, and sabers were all distributed to white companies, and the colored companies put off with muzzle-loading muskets. The governor has refused to organize companies composed of colored men, as we believe, because they are colored men, although it is made his duty by the laws of Georgia to organize all companies that have the required number of men enrolled. He has refused to distribute arms, furnished to the State by the United States, to companies composed of colored men, as we believe, because they are colored men, in violation of the act of Congress of March 3, 1873, which provides "that in the organization and equipment of military companies and organizations with said arms, no discrimination shall be made on account of race, color, or former condition of servitude." Your memorialists assert that it was the purpose of the Legislature in passing the acts of August 24, 1872, and February 22, 1873, to so legislate that the governor could refuse to distribute arms to companies of colored men, and they further assert that the governor of Georgia has, in the organization and equipment of military companies with the arms distributed to the State by the United States, made a discrimination between said companies on account of race, color, and former condition of servitude.

Again, the memorialists say:

Your memorialists respectfully call your attention to the following additional facts: All or nearly all of the white companies are composed of men who fought in the confederate army to destroy the Union. Many of the colored companies are composed of men who fought in the Union Army to sustain the Government. The white companies choose the confederate gray for their uniforms; the colored companies prefer the Union blue. On the 19th day of January last the white companies of Savannah celebrated the anniversary of the birth of General Robert E. Lee, (to which, however, we did not object,) and were reviewed by General Joseph E. Johnston. No national flag was displayed by the companies, twelve in all, although a confederate battle-flag, carried through the late war by the fifty-fourth Georgia regiment, was noticed as the "brigade" marched through the street, and it marked the post of honor where General Johnston stood to review the "brigade." Recently three white companies in Atlanta met for parade, when the commander of the "battalion" requested the captain of one of the companies to send his colors, a national flag, from the line, saying the flag was objectionable to himself and the majority of the men in the companies, and they would not march in the column with it. When colored companies parade they honor the national flag.

So much for the evidences of loyalty that pervade the Georgia militia. Again, the honorable Senator pleads most earnestly that his people are misunderstood. As reluctant as he is to appear in this debate, he could not, he says, remain silent in his place and suffer the gratuitous insults which Senators on this side of the Chamber have deemed proper to utter; he could not permit the people of his section to rest under the imputation that they are murderers and assassins, without raising a voice in their defense.

Sir, I will resent an unjust imputation or aspersion upon the character of the people of the South as promptly as the Senator. Far be it from me to utter a word that would reflect upon the good people of Georgia or of any section of the country. I have the honor to represent on this floor a large constituency made up of southern men, men "to the manner born," and I would not willingly utter a word that would reflect upon the character of southern gentlemen; and I take pleasure in saying that many Mississippians belong to the highest type of gentlemen. While I represent the class of men referred to, I have the honor—and I esteem it an honor—to represent also another class of people at the South. I am one of the representatives of a people at the South numbering between four and five million, who constitute the laboring classes of the country, the men who cultivate the cotton and the corn, who work the sugar fields; and not only that class of laborers, but thousands of poor white men who, heretofore under the old régime, had no social or political privileges which the wealthy, chivalric planter was bound to respect, occupying a position lower in the social scale in that country than the veriest slave. In view of that fact, when the Senator and his colleagues upon that side of the Chamber undertake to say that there are no outrages practiced upon the negro and the poor whites of the South, that the people at the South are loyal to the Government, as was said by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] yesterday—when they undertake to say that the negro has his rights, that the white people of that country—I mean the dominant classes—are disposed to accord to the negro all the rights which are guaranteed to him under American law, I am compelled to deny that statement. It is an unpleasant duty which I have to perform; but I am constrained to say that outrages are perpetrated at the South for political and partisan purposes, for the purpose of advancing the ends of secession democracy, the main object of that party being the final overthrow of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution; and for this reason I deem it my duty as a Senator to present to the Senate, unpleasant though it be, some of the facts which go to demonstrate that outrages, murders, assassinations, and lawlessness do exist at the South, and if it happens to fall upon any of the people of Georgia or of Mississippi, I cannot help it. They are responsible for their acts; they make their own history. The facts to which I propose to advert are matters of record, to be found in our courts of justice, and if in the course of this debate I shall allude to some unpleasant things, it will be simply a history of those men who are governed by their passions and not by their respect for law or the rights of others. The honorable Senator says, "I challenge the refutation of the declaration that wherever in the Southern States people of intelligence have control of affairs, property, life, and rights, political and personal, are as secure as in any State of this Union." Upon the truth or falsity of this statement hangs the solution of the southern question. This impression has obtained throughout the country that there is peace, quiet, order, and adequate protection for person and property at the South, such protection as the organic law of this country, affords to its citizens. This impression in relation to the condition of the South has been brought about by the mendacious representations which have been continually made by the Associated Press at the South, such as: all the difficulties, outrages, &c., were perpetrated by the negroes and those whom they please to call "carpet-baggers," who encourage hostility between the races, array the negro against the white man, plunder and misgovern the people of the South; that when negroes are killed by white men, it is done in defending their wives and children, their lives and their property.

The crying evil of the South to-day, and it is not confined to any one locality, it obtains generally throughout the South, is the prevalence of lawlessness, the inadequate protection of property, and the insecurity of human life. The pistol, bowie-knife, and shot-gun are resorted to in the settlement of personal difficulties, and to an alarming extent for political and partisan purposes. It is a most lamentable fact, which brings a blush of shame to the cheek of a southern man when he is compelled to speak the truth. Public sentiment has become so vitiated, so demoralized, that the people of the South place a low estimate upon human life. The crime of murder is seldom punished. The exceptions, however, are against the negro. He is invariably punished. Justice in the South is loth to shield its sword when the criminal is a colored man. You may search the records of the criminal proceedings in the South since the war, and I venture the assertion that you will not find one single instance where there was a scintilla of proof against a negro who committed homicide but that he has been punished—either hung, or incarcerated in the State's prison for life. In the State of Louisiana thirty-five hundred murders have been committed since 1866, and I undertake to say, that not a single murderer has been punished in that State to this good day. I quote from the report of General Sheridan, as follows:

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, January 10, 1875—11.30 p. m.

Hon. W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

Since the year 1866, nearly thirty-five hundred persons, a great majority of whom were colored men, have been killed and wounded in this State. In 1868 the official record shows that eighteen hundred and eighty-four were killed and wounded. From 1868 to the present time no official investigation has been made, and the civil authorities in all but a few cases have been unable to arrest, convict, and punish perpetrators. Consequently, there are no correct records to be consulted for information. There is ample evidence, however, to show that more than twelve hundred persons have been killed and wounded during this time, on account of their political sentiments. Frightful massacres have occurred in the parishes of Bossier, Caddo, Catahoula, Saint Bernard, Saint Landry, Grant, and Orleans. The general character of the massacres in the above-named parishes is so well known that it is unnecessary to describe them.

The isolated cases can best be illustrated by the following instances, which I take from a mass of evidence now lying before me of men killed on account of their political principles: In Natchitoches Parish the number of isolated cases reported is thirty-three. In the parish of Bienville the number of men killed is thirty. In Red River Parish the isolated cases of men killed is thirty-four. In Winn Parish the number of isolated cases where men were killed is fifteen In Jackson Parish the number killed is twenty; and in Catahoula Parish the number of isolated cases reported where men were killed is fifty, and most of the country parishes throughout the State will show a corresponding state of affairs. The following statements will illustrate the character and kind of these outrages:

On the 30th of August, 1874, in Red River Parish, six State and parish officers, named Twitchell, Divers, Holland, Howell, Edgerton, and Willis, were taken, together with four negroes, under guard to be carried out of the State, and were deliberately murdered on the 29th of August, 1864. The White League tried, sentenced, and hung two negroes on the 28th of August, 1874. Three negroes were shot and killed at Brownsville, just before the arrival of the United States troops in this parish. Two white-leaguers rode up to a negro cabin and called for a drink of water. When the old colored man turned to draw it, they shot him in the back and killed him. The courts were all broken up in this district, and the district judge driven out.

In the parish of Caddo, prior to the arrival of the United States troops, all of the officers at Shreveport were compelled to abdicate by the White League, which took possession of the place. Among those obliged to abdicate were Walsh, the mayor, Rapers, the sheriff, Wheaton, clerk of the court, Durant, the recorder, and Ferguson and Renfro, administrators. Two colored men who had given evidence in regard to frauds committed in the parish were compelled to flee for their lives, and reached this city last night, having been smuggled through in a cargo of cotton.

In the parish of Bossier the White League have attempted to force the abdication of Judge Baker, the United States commissioner and parish judge, together with O'Neal, the sheriff, and Walker, the clerk of the court; and they have compelled the parish and district courts to suspend operations. Judge Baker states that the white-leaguers notified him several times that if he became a candidate on the republican ticket, or if he attempted to organize the republican party, he should not live until election.

This statement is a sad commentary upon the administration of justice in Louisiana. What is true of Louisiana, is true of every other Southern State; and I propose to substantiate what I say before I finish my remarks. I shall not leave it open to uncertainty. I will endeavor to show to our friends on the other side of the Chamber, who have attempted in this debate to cover up the fact, that murder and outrage obtain in the South; and I charge it upon them that they have attempted to cover up and treat with indifference amounting to contempt these facts, because it militates against their party and their party policy. I say to our democratic friends that it will not do. The time has come when the American people will be deceived no longer by newspaper correspondents from the South—men who are in the employ of secession democrats. The time has come when the American people will demand the facts. The evidence to-day is clear that the American people are beginning to appreciate the gravity of the situation at the South.

It has been represented that the republican party was attempting to get up another "bleeding Kansas" for political effect; that they were parading these outrages in order that they might excite sympathy. That thing has been iterated and reiterated in this Hall during this discussion; but the American people, I am happy to know, are beginning to investigate this matter for themselves. When the noble hero Sheridan, an honest, brave, patriotic soldier, states that the very atmosphere of Louisiana is "impregnated" with assassination, the American people begin to feel that it is possible, notwithstanding the democratic press of the country have denied and suppressed the facts, that there may be some truth in it after all?

Now, as to the matter of the administration of justice, and I speak from personal knowledge, I have not been a casual observer of the events of the South for the last twelve or fifteen years; I have been intimately connected with every form and phase, with every shifting social or political scene in the South since the war. I am familiar with the events of the whole period of transition from slavery to freedom, and I know whereof I speak when I say, that as a rule there is no such thing as conviction for the crime of murder in the South, especially where a colored man is the victim. There are very many where white men are killed, though even then adequate punishment is rare. We have some as able, honest, and faithful judges as ever graced the bench in the history of mankind; but there is a vitiated public sentiment in the South that controls our courts, controls our juries, controls all our ministers of justice. A white man may slay a negro, and it may be proven as clear as the noon-day sun that it was a case of murder with malice aforethought; and yet you cannot get a jury to convict, and, in nine cases out of ten, you cannot get a grand jury to indict a white man for killing a negro or a poor white man.

But change the scene. Suppose a negro has committed some crime. The whole country is in arms. A negro has murdered a white man perhaps. The Associated Press throughout the South darts its lightning messages all over this country proclaiming a negro riot. The people in the section where the homicide is committed pretend to be alarmed. The slogan is taken up by the Ku-Klux and White League clans, and suddenly there is a hurrying to and fro. The negro is arrested, and in many cases he is not tried, but summary punishment is administered without judge or jury. Where a white man kills a negro the form of an inquest is sometimes held, and the verdict in nine cases out of ten is a farce, something after this manner: "That the negro came to his death by an inordinate desire to run after a white man's pistol." That is about the way the matter is determined. In this connection, in regard to the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Georgia, in reply to the Senator from Indiana, that in Georgia there was as much protection for human life, for property, and all the rights of a citizen as obtain in the State of Indiana, allow me to present some statistical facts in relation to the prevalence of crime in the South, taken from the census of 1870. In the State of Maine, containing a population of 626,915, we find that there were 7 homicides in the year 1870. In the State of New Hampshire, containing a population of 318,300, there was 1 homicide. In Vermont there was none. In Massachusetts, containing a population of 1,457,351, there were 22 homicides. In Rhode Island, 5. In Connecticut, 6, containing a population of over half a million. In New York, containing 4,000,000 inhabitants, out of that number there were 70 homicides. In New Jersey, 5. In Pennsylvania, 60. In Ohio, containing a population of 2,000,000, there were 54. In Michigan, containing a population of 1,184,000, there were 11 homicides. In Indiana, the State the distinguished Senator from Georgia referred to, containing a population of 1,680,637 inhabitants, there were 32 homicides in 1870. In Wisconsin, 6. In Illinois, 56. In Minnesota, 5. In Iowa, 24. In Nebraska, 11. Kansas, 42. Total in all these States, 417.

Now I come to the Southern States, and I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to those particularly where the affairs of the State are under the control of the "intelligent and honest people," where their laws are properly executed, where there is the same sort of protection, as the Senator says, to property and to life that obtains in Indiana. In the State of Delaware, containing 125,000 inhabitants, there were 4 homicides. In Maryland, with only 780,000 inhabitants, 20 homicides. In the District of Columbia, 13. Virginia, including West Virginia, containing a million and a half of population, 80 homicides. In Kentucky, containing over 1,000,000 inhabitants, 73 homicides. In North Carolina, 48. In Tennessee, containing 1,258,520 inhabitants, 117 homicides. In South Carolina, containing 705,000 inhabitants, there were 35. In Georgia, containing 1,184,109 inhabitants, we find in the year 1870 160 murders; while in the State of Indiana for the same year, containing about the same population, we find only 32. There is the difference. In Georgia, 116. In Florida, 44. In Mississippi, 89. In Missouri, 94. In Arkansas, 76. Louisiana, 128. In Texas, 323. Now, these statistics of murder were gathered from the records of the courts. They were not gotten up in any "outrage-mill" or for any political purposes. They are matters of statistics that are placed in the archives of the Government. We find in these Southern States during one year 1,351 murders compared with 417 in the Northern States. There is no question in my mind but that at the time these statistics were gathered there were hundreds, yes, I may say, a thousand more murders, the only evidence of which was the bones of the victims lying in the swamps or perhaps newspaper reports, not followed by prosecution.

I have a little further information upon this matter of crime which I desire to present—and I will be as brief as possible—a statement that is made up, giving the number of murders, and by whom perpetrated, and upon whom, in the State of Arkansas since its reconstruction or since the war. Out of a population in 1870 of 122,169 blacks, and 362,115 whites, the number of murders and assaults with intent to kill committed in that State since reconstruction aggregated eleven hundred and sixty-nine. These facts are taken from the records of the courts. They are not all murders, but eleven hundred and sixty-nine comprise murders and assaults with intent to kill. Of those by whom these murders and crimes were committed ten hundred and seventy-eight are whites, and only eighty-two are blacks. Another feature of this statement is, that the victims are eight hundred and sixty-five republicans, and three hundred and four democrats—nearly three to one. There, sir, is a phase of the character of these outrages and murders, where nearly three to one of the victims of murder are republicans. What inference shall we draw from that? Can we draw any other than that these murders are perpetrated to further the partisan ends of a certain party? It is a singular coincidence that in a State three to one of the victims of outrage and murder happen to belong to the republican party. I hold in my hand, but I will not detain the Senate by reading it, a list of murders committed in my own State in the year 1874. They amount to ninety-nine. I have the names taken from the records of the auditor of public accounts, where the payments have been made for expenses in holding coroners' inquests. This does not include the one hundred colored men massacred at Vicksburgh December 7, nor any of the numerous murders upon which no coroners' inquest fees were paid by the State.

In the State of Mississippi there has been up to within the last six months, less lawlessness, better order, more protection for life and property than perhaps in any other Southern State.

It is a notorious fact, a matter that will not be questioned, that Mississippi is one of the best reconstructed States among the fifteen insurrectionary States. We have not had, with but few exceptions, the difficulties that have characterized other Southern States. We have had good government. No charge of misgovernment has been brought against Mississippi. We have had there the best judicial system probably of any Southern State. We have administered justice. Our ministers of justice have held the scales evenly balanced; yet, notwithstanding all these safeguards, notwithstanding these facts, in that State alone, containing less than a million of inhabitants, we have had ninety-nine murders during the last year. And yet it is stated that in the South, where intelligent men have control of the government, there is no more crime, that there is as much protection for human life as in Indiana. I am sorry to be obliged to stand in my place in the Senate and present these facts; they are shameful facts, but they are nevertheless true. It only goes to show that there is a public sentiment at the South so vitiated upon this subject of murder. If a man fancies that his neighbor has insulted him, his redress is the pistol, bowie-knife, and shot-gun.

Now, sir, I propose to refer the Senate to the evidence, and I call the attention of our friends on the other side of the Chamber to the character of the evidence that I propose to adduce. It is evidence, I presume to say, they will not question, because it comes from unwilling witnesses. It proceeds from statements made by the leading democratic journals of the South. It does not come from any southern "outrage-mill;" it does not proceed from any "southern outrage-convention," that gets up these statements of lawlessness for political effect. It is from a pure democratic source, and relates to one of the Southern States which has never been demoralized by "carpet-bag" rule. No strangers have robbed and plundered the people and thereby goaded them, "like the teaser in the Spanish bull-fights" referred to by the honorable Senator from Georgia in his speech, into acts of violence and lawlessness. I refer to the State of Kentucky. I will read an extract from one of the leading journals of that State; and let me say, while I do not pretend that newspaper statements are the most reliable evidence, I think I will be allowed to quote from democratic journals on this question of outrage and murder in the South.

Says the Louisville Courier-Journal in relation to crime in that State:

> The shooter has only to kill or wound his man to make himself certain of escape.

That is the way justice is administered in the good old Commonwealth of Kentucky, the home of Henry Clay.

> We never convict anybody of murder except a nigger or a pauper.

That is the statement of the editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal. I desire to repeat that—

> We never convict anybody of murder except a nigger or a pauper.

He never penned a truer statement in his life; and what is true of Kentucky is true to a greater or less extent of every State south of the Ohio River.

I will quote more democratic authority on this question of the prevalence of crime in the State of Kentucky, where, I repeat, no carpet-baggers and negroes have ruled the country. That State has been in the hands of intelligent, patriotic, high-minded southern democrats. Here is an extract from the "Lexington, Missouri, Caucasian," a leading democratic paper, one of these white-line papers. Its very name indicates the character of its politics, advocating the doctrine that this is a "white man's" Government, and that a negro has no right that a white man is bound to respect. It says:

> Kentucky's criminal record rivals Missouri's—and human language can award it no more appalling pre-eminence.

That is a serious reflection on both these good democratic States. The diction of this editor is not as pure as it might be, but it is characteristic of democratic journalism in the South—

> Hell seems to have been upset and spilled all over the South.

That is the expression of a democratic editor speaking of a neighboring State. He says that from the lawlessness that prevails in the State of Kentucky "Hell seems to have been upset and spilled all over the State." He then says:

> Its very sod is reeking with the blood of slaughter.

This statement was penned only a few months ago, not at the time referred to by the distinguished Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ,] when he undertook to palliate the condition of things at the South immediately after the war and the necessary demoralization that followed the terrible revolution, but ten years, a decade, has passed, and yet a democratic editor says that the very sod of the good old State of Kentucky is "reeking with the blood of slaughter." But he goes on:

> Eleven murders, twenty-two shooting and stabbing affrays, and the wholesale killings and burnings at Lancaster, all in four weeks, and not one legal hanging in four times as long, is enough to blast for a generation the fame of any ordinary half-dozen Commonwealths, even though the bones of Clay and Crittenden reposed in each of them. It is a horrid blot upon southern civilization.

There is a statement made by a democratic editor representing the extremest doctrines of the secession democracy; I mean the white-man's doctrine. He says that it is a "horrid blot upon southern civilization;" yet when a republican stands in his place in this Senate and makes the statement that murder, assassination, lawlessness, and outrage have prevailed at the South, the Senator from Georgia rises to his feet and pronounces the statement "false." This was his language. Another Senator rises and says it is "exaggerated." The Senator from Georgia again says: "We have as much peace, quiet, order, and protection for human life and property in the South, where 'intelligent men' control, as in any Northern State." Yet here is a statement made by a democratic editor that the condition of things in the State of Kentucky is a "horrid blot upon southern civilization." If a republican editor had uttered that sentiment in certain sections of the South, he would have been waited upon before the ink was dry on his paper, by a band of white-leaguers, and hung up to the first tree. Because the noble hero, Sheridan, happened to say in a dispatch to the President, speaking of the condition of things in Louisiana, that there were "banditti" there, lawless men banded together for plunder, for riot, for revolution, he is abused, traduced, aspersed, and a Senator from his seat in this Senate says, because he designated these assassins by the only proper name which would express their true character, that this gallant soldier and patriot is "not fit to breathe the air of a free republic." Yet a southern editor of a democratic paper is compelled to admit that crime in Kentucky, is of such a terrible character as to become a "a blot upon southern civilization."

> It gives a tinge of justice—> to the Yankee howl about our ruffianism, heathenism, barbarism.

Says this editor—

O, how indignant was the honorable Senator from Georgia the other day at the mere mention by the Senator from Vermont of the term "barbarism," as applied to the customs of the South of former days! His virtuous indignation knew no bounds, and we did not know at one time but that the mild-mannered Senator of New England would have to face a dueling-pistol or submit to be "posted" as a coward, after the most approved style of so-called "chivalry."

I have many other quotations from democratic sources. I will read, however, for the edification of our friends, one more statement taken from the same paper, in relation to the condition of things in Kentucky, and then I will pass on. Says the Louisville Courier-Journal:

> The law against carrying concealed weapons is a dead letter. There has scarcely been a conviction of a respectable, well to do man for murder or homicide within the last twenty years. Every coward and bully goes armed. Every case of human slaughter goes unpunished. Every case of shooting with intent to kill passes by as an amusing episode, provided there is no funeral. Even the most atrocious, cold-blooded, deliberate, malignant, dastardly assassinations have left no mark on the statute-books except the mark of acquittal purchased by money or intimidation.

This is the statement of a democratic journal in regard to the law-abiding and law-loving people of Kentucky, where no carpet-bagger has plundered her treasury, where no negro has ruled, that there is a public sentiment, says this democratic editor, that absolutely intimidates the law-respecting people. A jury cannot indict, a petit jury cannot convict because of this intimidation; and yet we are told there is no intimidation in the South. I appeal to the good sense of any man if lawless men can intimidate the noble, patriotic men of old Kentucky so that her courts fail to convict of crime, what can they not do in Louisiana? And yet, sir, in the face of these admitted facts, we are told that the statements about intimidation, murder, and outrage are all gotten up for "political effect;" "exaggerated," says the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] "I do not stand up here," he says, "to defend murder, but I propose to protest against these exaggerations." Great heavens! where in the history of any civilized country is there such an arraignment as this democratic editor presents to the world of the condition of things in the State of Kentucky. It is enough to appall the civilization of the nineteenth century, that in this Christian land, in the State of Kentucky, men can murder, can attempt to murder, and the law-abiding people who believe in protecting life and property are so intimidated that a grand jury will not indict, nor a petit jury convict. That is the condition of things in Kentucky; and yet Senators say there is no murder in the South. This editor goes on to say:

> Red-handed murderers roam at large among respectable people.—

Not among negroes, not among "carpet-baggers" and "scalawags," but among "respectable people"—

> The rule is that you may kill your man with impunity. There is no danger of the gallows or the prison for the assassin who has money or friends. A drink too many, a word too much, a pull of the trigger of a six-shooter, and a funeral, so the murderer be a good-natured fellow and is rich enough to pay the fiddler.

That is the way the law wags in Kentucky.

I desire here to cite some further authority upon the condition of things in the South as relates to crimes committed, of a political character. The Senator from Georgia said to the honorable Senator from Indiana, "Why do you not arraign the metropolitan press of the North? You say that the associated press of the South have been peddling lies, have been attempting to cover up outrage and murder. Why do you not cite the New York Times?" I propose to give the honorable Senator and the Senate a quotation from the New York Times in a recent publication of that journal.

Says the Times, of date January 2:

Thousands of men voted the democratic ticket in the State of Alabama against their conviction from fear of violence or loss of employment, and many thousands more failed to vote at all from the same cause.

And yet there is no intimidation in Alabama!

The northern people can have no conception of the state of society here, and the testimony taken before the committee cannot but make a deep impression. The evidence fully shows that a republican form of government cannot be maintained in the State of Alabama without the aid of the United States troops.

And yet that State is under democratic control; "intelligent, honest men control its government!"

The evidence shows that the churches and school-houses of the colored people were burned and destroyed by white democrats, only because the colored people who worshiped and sent their children to school therein were republicans; that armed white democrats, in companies of hundreds, visited some of the more intelligent of these colored people, beat them, and drove them from their homes.

Here are some of the good, law-loving, quiet people of Georgia referred to:

On the Georgia border white democrats came to this State and voted not only once, but in some instances three times, and led negroes to the polls and made them vote the democratic ticket. At Girard, in Russell County, the police from Columbus, Georgia, surrounded the polls and kept possession of them all day. It has also been found that the polls at Spring Hill, Barbour County, were destroyed by democrats, and about six hundred votes lost to the republicans, and the son of Judge Kicls, who was the United States supervisor, was killed; also, one hundred and fifty colored republicans killed and wounded at Eufaula, in the same county, on the day of election by armed democrats, and upward of five hundred republican voters driven away from the polls.

Not a particle of evidence has been furnished by the Alabama democrats or any body else that the United States troops in the slightest degree interfered with the election. On the other hand, the subordinate military officers were so bound up by General Order No. 75 that they did not feel authorized to do anything or extend any help whatever to the election officers, except when called upon to assist United States marshals in the execution of writs issued by the United States courts. The proscription, social ostracism, withdrawal of business, and loss of employment among republicans on account of politics amounted to a reign of terror, and thousands of voters were lost to the republican party at the late election from these causes.

This is a statement published to the world by the New York Times, which the honorable Senator from Georgia desired, with a slight tinge of sarcasm, the honorable Senator from Indiana to include in his animadversion upon the Associated Press of the South. I am informed that the committee who have investigated this matter will present not only these facts, but stronger facts, showing that a reign of terror, murder, and assassination prevails in the State of Alabama. I will read the statement of a citizen of Alabama, and a man of no mean repute, a man who was born in that State, who has occupied the honorable position of its chief magistrate. He says in a recent public utterance:

The Ku-Klux and White League are in existence. How can justice be done in a community where they abound, when the oath they take to the organization is obeyed before the one they take to the State? This prowling about the country at night to kill lone men is not the chivalry of the past nor is it the chivalry of the late war.

That is the statement of ex-Governor Parsons. He has always been a conservative man in his political views. He was among the foremost Alabamians when the State seceded. He did his utmost after his State had gone out of the Union to stand by the confederate cause. He says that these Ku-Klux, these White League organizations do exist; and that justice cannot be executed in the country where they exist, because the jurymen who are sworn to pass upon crimes are bound by the oaths of their organization, which they regard as paramount to the oath they take to do justice between man and man, to decide upon the law and evidence without fear or favor.

Permit me in this connection to submit several extracts from the President's message in proof of the existence and purposes of the White League banditti:

The following is from the platform of the White League, adopted at Alto on the 11th of July:

"That we regard it the sacred and political duty of every member of this club to discountenance and socially proscribe all white men who unite themselves with the radical party, and to supplant every political opponent in all his vocations by the employment and support of those who ally themselves with the white man's party; and we pledge ourselves to exert our energies and use our means to the consummating of this end."

The following is from the Enterprise of the 6th of August, published at Franklin, Saint Mary's Parish:

"We ask for no assistance; we protest against any intervention. * * * We own this soil of Louisiana, by virtue of our endeavor, as a heritage from our ancestors, and it is ours and ours alone. Science, literature, history, art, civilization, and law belong alone to us, and not to the negroes. They have no record but barbarism and idolatry, nothing since the war but that of error, incapacity, beastliness, voudouism, and crime. Their right to vote is but the result of the war, their exercise of it a monstrous impositon, and a vindictive punishment upon us for that ill-advised rebellion."

"Therefore are we banding together in a White League army, drawn up only on the defensive, exasperated by continual wrong, it is true, but acting under Christian and high-principled leaders, and determined to defeat these negroes in their infamous design of depriving us of all we hold sacred and precious on the soil of our nativity or adoption, or perish in the attempt.

"Come what may, upon the radical party must rest the whole responsibility of this conflict, and as sure as there is a just God in heaven their unnatural, cold-blooded, and revengeful measures of reconstruction in Louisiana will meet with a terrible retribution."

The following is from the Minden Democrat:

"The remedy for all the evils that afflict our State and every Southern State under negro and carpet-bag rule is very simple. The incendiaries who flood our country at the approach of every election must be looked after; the proceedings of midnight gatherings in dark and gloomy places must be known. Incendiary teachings of the carpet-baggers and scalawags to inflame the minds of the negroes must not be tolerated again."

The following is from the Mansfield Reporter of July 4 and July 11:

"There is nothing to be gained by pleadings or concessions, but everything is within our reach, if we will move forward and grasp it. Let our actions be such that everybody will know what we want, and let them see that we are in earnest and are determined to carry out the programme, regardless of the consequences."

"The lines must be drawn at once, before our opponents are thoroughly organized, for by this means we will prevent many milk-and-cider fellows from falling into the enemy's ranks. While the white man's party guarantees the negro all of his present rights, they do not intend that white carpet-baggers and renegades shall be permitted to organize and prepare the negroes for the coming campaign. Without the assistance of these villains the negroes are totally incapable of effectually organizing themselves, and unless they are previously excited and drilled, one-half of them will not come to the polls, and a large percentage of the remainder will vote the white man's ticket."

The following is from the Alexandria Democrat of July 15:

"The people have determined that the Kellogg government has to be gotten rid of, and they will not scruple about the means, as they have done in the past."

The following is from the Shreveport Times of July 29:

"There has been some red-handed work done in this parish that was necessary, but it was evidently done by cool, determined, and just men, who knew just how far to go, and we doubt not if the same kind of work is necessary it will be done.

We say again that we fully, cordially, approve what the white men of Grant and Rapides did at Colfax; the white man who does not is a creature so base that he shames the worst class of his species. We say, again, we are going to carry the elections in this State next fall.

"If the Federal Government again strikes them down then let the infamy of the deed rest upon the shameless despotism that has arisen out of the malignity and hate of the northern people, beneath whose withering influence no sentiment of liberty can survive; under whose policy of meanness, cowardice, and hate, every community that does not worship it must be trampled in the dust, and every civilization that does not pay tribute to it blasted by its curse."

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted by White League No. 1 of the second ward of Livingston Parish:

Resolved, That we will have no man on our farms or in our workshops who votes the radical ticket.

Be it further resolved, That we consider it the duty of (and cordially invite) all white men opposed to radicalism to co-operate with us.

Further resolved, That we consider it beneath our moral dignity to associate with any white man who votes the republican ticket or affiliates with that party in any manner whatever.

Further resolved, That we pledge our support to the democratic party.

Next as to Tennessee. In three counties in Tennessee, the counties of Rutherford, Sumner, and Gibson, during the past year, there have been thirty-nine murders. Tennessee is a State governed by no carpet-baggers; no negroes control affairs in that State; and yet in three counties alone this is a matter of record. It is no information that comes from an "outrage-mill," but is taken from the records of their courts; facts that cannot be controverted. In three counties during the last year thirty-nine murders have been committed; and yet the honorable Senator from Georgia says that in a Southern State where "intelligent men" control, where "honest men" govern, there is as much protection to human life as there is in any of the Northern States.

I desire to have incorporated in my speech—I will not weary the Senate by reading it, because I know that almost every Senator is familiar with it—the statement of the district attorney for the western district of Tennessee in his report to the Attorney-General:

I have the honor to say that from affidavits now on file in my office the following facts appear: Since the election on the 6th of August last bands of men, armed and in disguise and known as the Ku-Klux Klan, have been riding through certain portions of Gibson County, in this district, almost every night, committing outrages upon the colored people, in some instances whipping them and in others threatening to kill them; and on Saturday night, August 16, a number of colored people were shot at on their return home from church by certain of these masked men. An old negro named Joshua was severely whipped, and at the time was told by the Ku-Klux that they should again visit him on Saturday night, August 22. Thereupon, on that night, several of his colored neighbors started to go and assist the old man in defending himself, and on the way thither were met by a party of men, armed, mounted, and in disguise, who first fired upon them, they returning the fire, and either killing or wounding a mule; whereupon both parties fled.

This is, as I suppose, "the conspiracy to take the lives of the white citizens of the neighborhood" for which "sixteen negroes were committed to the jail of Gibson County in this State," referred to in Governor Brown's telegram. The next day, Sunday, the State authorities commenced arresting the black men in the vicinity almost indiscriminately, taking, among others, two colored preachers out of their churches. The prisoners so arrested were confined and guarded to await their preliminary trial the next day. During that night some of these prisoners were taken out of the building in which they were confined by some of the guard, and by means of threats, and in one instance by hanging the prisoner to a tree, confessions were extorted from them, which confessions, so obtained, were used as testimony against them in their examination before the committing court.

During Monday and Tuesday, August 24 and 25, sixteen black men were committed to the jail of the county; fourteen as criminals, the other two as witnesses against them. They were conducted on foot to the jail, a distance of eleven miles, bound together with trace-chains about their necks secured by padlocks, twelve being committed on Monday and four on Tuesday, while the sheriff's posse who conveyed them thither were mounted. On their way to the jail on Monday two attempts were made by armed men in disguise to obtain possession of these colored prisoners, twelve in number, but the attempts were unsuccessful. Fourteen of the prisoners were confined together in a small cell in the jail, two being left in the hall of the jail. On Tuesday night, August 25, a band of masked men, armed, and generally mounted, variously estimated to number from seventy-five to one hundred and fifty, surrounded the jail, forcibly entered it, took out those sixteen colored prisoners, tied them together with ropes, marched them a few hundred yards distant to a bridge crossing a small river, and commenced shooting them indiscriminately, then and there killing four and wounding others, one of whom has since died of his wounds, and some are known to have escaped.

We have these reports lying on our tables as to the character of crime in the State of Tennessee, especially in relation to the Trenton affair. In this connection, allow me to say, that we have in that report an exhibition of the condition of things as regards the courts of the country. One Senator says: "Why do you republicans of the South complain that you cannot get justice? that your laws are not executed? that crime is not punished? You have the executive officers, you control the courts, you control the constabulary forces, and why is it that you cannot get justice and punish crime; who is to blame?" In that report you will ascertain the condition of things in the State of Tennessee. A murderer has an opportunity under the laws of that State of challenging thirty-five jurors; and in the case there reported, where there is a conspiracy, a large number of men indicted, when they come to be tried, each one of them has an opportunity to challenge thirty-five jurors; and there are so many included in these indictments that they can challenge the whole county peremptorily, and you cannot impanel a jury to convict them. And a similar law obtains in many of the Southern States.

We are asked "How is it that you do not punish crime at the South?" I can answer that question so far as it relates to the State of Mississippi. I blush when I say it, but the cause of truth, the interest I feel in presenting the facts to the American Senate and the American people, compel me to say that in the State of Mississippi, where our laws are executed with as much impartiality as in any other southern State, I do not know among the several hundred homicides committed in that State a single instance, since reconstruction, where a white man has been convicted of killing a negro; and I venture the assertion that there have been over five hundred murders of negroes in that State by white men, and not one of them punished; but I do know of a large number of colored men who have been hung or incarcerated within our penitentiary walls for even making an assault upon a white man with intent to kill. Sir, it is impossible to convict a white man of murder, because if a white man kills a negro there is a public sentiment there which excuses and palliates the crime. This is the natural outgrowth of slavery. Under the slave régime a man who killed his neighbor's negro was liable to the owner for the price of the negro, and in some instances, if he was a favorite servant, he would demand further satisfaction, and kill the slayer of his negro. But it was not regarded as homicide to kill a negro in many of the States in the South; and that estimate of a negro's life obtains to a greater or less extent to-day throughout the South, which palliates the slaying of a negro.

There is probably no State in the Union that has more stringent punitive laws than the State of Mississippi, and yet we cannot convict or punish white men of murder, because of the depraved public sentiment and the want of a proper appreciation of the value of human life, the natural outgrowth and concomitant of the institution of slavery. Men who have trafficked in the bodies and souls of men, of buying and selling God's image, become, as a natural sequence, callous to the idea of the sanctity of human life.

The State of Texas is another State controlled by "intelligent, honest men," and, as the honorable Senator from Georgia would have us believe, when they control in the South there is protection for life and property. Let us see about Texas. Over six hundred murders have been committed since Governor Coke, a democratic governor, succeeded Governor Davis. There is a fearful record in a little over a year and a half of six hundred murders. In Texas six hundred murders are committed in a year and a half. No one is alarmed for the safety of society. This is no statement of "an outrage-mill." I will now cite a statement in regard to the condition of crime in the State of Texas under democratic rule, taken from a democratic source. I refer to the Saint Louis (Missouri) Republican, a democratic paper of the Bourbon type. It says, in speaking of the condition of Texas:

> Whole counties are under the absolute control of organized bands of desperate men, who set the laws of the State at defiance and levy contributions upon the people at will.

This is a statement certified to by a democratic editor of one of the leading western papers of the condition of Texas. I propose now to call the attention of the honorable Senator from Georgia to the condition of his own State. I refer again to the press of his State. It is conceded that the public press is the great formative power of public sentiment, and at the same time an index of the condition of society in the community or section of the country where it is located. I read from the Daily News, one of the leading democratic papers published at Atlanta, Georgia, as follows:

> Against the fate that confronts us what have the southern people? Is it that "prudence" which such papers as the Louisville Courier-Journal advocate, but which men less gifted than the editor of that paper call a dastardly submission? No! Our only hope is in a stern, resolute resistance, a resistance to the death, if necessary, with arms in our hands. Let there be "White Leagues" formed in every town, village, and hamlet of the South; and let us organize for the great struggle which seems to be inevitable. If the October elections which are to be held at the North are favorable to the radicals, the time will have arrived for us to prepare for the very worst. The radicalism of the republican party must be met by the radicalism of white men. We have no war to make against the United States Government, but against the republican party our hate must be unquenchable, our war interminable and merciless. Fast fleeting away is the day for wordy protests and idle appeals to the magnanimity of the republican party.
> By brute force they are endeavoring to force us into acquiescence to their hideous programme. We have submitted long enough to indignities, and it is time to meet brute force with brute force. Every Southern State should swarm with White Leagues, and we should stand ready to act the moment Grant signs the civil-rights bill. It will not do to wait until radicalism has fettered us to the car of social equality before we make an effort to resist it. The signing of the bill will be a declaration of war against the southern whites. It is our duty to ourselves, it is our duty to our children, it is our duty to the white race whose prowess subdued the wilderness of this continent; whose civilization filled it with cities and towns and villages; whose mind gave it power and grandeur, and whose labor imparted to it prosperity, and whose love made peace and happiness dwell within its homes, to take up the gage of battle the moment it is thrown down.
> If the white democrats of the North are men, they will not stand idly by and see us borne down by northern radicals and half-barbarous negroes. But no matter what they may do, it is time for us to organize. We have been temporizing long enough. Let northern radicals understand that military supervision of southern elections and the civil-rights bill mean war, that war means bloodshed, and that we are terribly in earnest, and even they, fanatical as they are, may retrace their steps before it is too late.

And again, I desire to present some southern democratic testimony as to the existence of White Leagues and the murders and massacres which have taken place as an offset to the Southern Associated Press denials of the existence and purposes of the organization. From the Atlanta News I will read the following extract from one of its editorials:

Here is what he says about the condition of the South and the purposes of White Leagues:

> Violence is to be deprecated and avoided, if possible; but where these men have been killed they have brought about their deaths by their own acts, and do not merit the sympathy of anybody. We shall not imitate the example of some of our Congressmen by condemning the killing of the men.
> We are not defending murder; we are not justifying assassination. We admit that there have been instances in which gross outrages have been perpetrated by men who disgraced their section by their acts.
> At the same time, we recognize the existence of a state of affairs which compels a summary procedure. What was termed the Camilla massacre, which occurred in this State in 1868, was justifiable in any sense of the word. Had every negro been killed who took part in the conflict, the whites would have been justified in killing them. So also in Mississippi, recently; so also in Louisiana.
> When Grant holds up our people to public view as assassins, let us tell the story as it exists. There is no denying that men were killed at Colfax and at Coushatta. There is no denying, too, that they were killed by the whites; but, deplorable as their killing was, they were the victims of their own dishonesty, their own villainy, their own incendiarism.

They have found out in Georgia that there is an "irrepressible conflict," and the leading paper of the State urges the people to form leagues and arm themselves for the inevitable struggle. I stated to the Senate that there was a conspiracy existing in the South, the object of which was revolution, rebellion against the Government of the United States. I am aware that it was a startling announcement; but here is a statement from high authority, a leading newspaper in the State of Georgia edited by one of the ablest men of that State, in which he calls on the people to arm themselves, to organize for the struggle which he says is inevitable. "War must come. We must strike for our rights." That is the same spirit that pervaded the South in 1860 when the secession democracy "fired the southern heart" into a flame of rebellion.

The same is true of the democratic press of the South; the same rash appeals are made to the people to organize for revolution. The struggle, they say, "is inevitable." Why, sir, when I see the temper and tone of the press of the South, it would seem that history was indeed repeating itself; that the dial had been turned back a decade and that we were really on the eve of another rebellion.

The same spirit animates the leaders of the secession democracy that characterized their efforts in 1861. In justice to the people of the South it is proper that I should make a distinction. I am happy to be able to say that there are thousands of southern men who do not subscribe to the rash follies of the democratic party. There is the old whig party, the men who still cling to the doctrine advocated by Henry Clay. These men were at heart loyal. They opposed the efforts of the secession rule-or-ruin democracy to plunge the country into an internecine war. They pointed out the fearful results to the South, and the sequel proved the truth of their assertions, and they are as powerless to-day as in 1861.

The same rash leaders of the secession democracy who brought bankruptcy and utter ruin upon the beautiful south-land; who plunged her into revolution and left her desolate, an utter waste; filled the land with lamentation and woe; her industries stricken down; her cities and towns reduced to ashes. The very men who brought this destruction upon the South are to-day attempting to revive the old secession party. They control the press of the South. They propose to again "fire the southern heart;" they advocate and indorse the organization of leagues for murder and assassination. "The struggle," in the language of this Georgia editor, "is inevitable," and we must arm.

I do not exaggerate the condition of the South when I say that there are in the South to-day at least half a million of men organized and armed with the most improved weapons, Winchester rifles and needle-guns. What does all this mean? Does the Senator from Georgia say that in his State there is peace, quiet, and order; that the people are loyal; that they are disposed to counsel peace and quiet? But I will proceed to read:

> By brute force they (the republicans) are endeavoring to force us into acquiescence to their hideous programme.

What "hideous programme" has the republican party proposed? What is the programme that is so hideous to the chivalric editor of the Atlanta News? Why, sir, it is the programme of universal liberty, the doctrine of equal protection under American law. That is "the head and front of our offending." Because we demand that the Ku-Klux assassins who go to the cabin of the poor, defenseless negro masked and under the cover of night to scourge and murder him, shall be arrested, and, if necessary, to use Federal bayonets; that they shall be tried, and, if found guilty, punished by a Federal court. That, sir, is "the hideous programme" that he speaks of.

Because we demand that an American citizen shall have the protection of American law at home as well as abroad; because we advocate that doctrine the southern aristocratic democracy propose to arm themselves and organize White Leagues for riot and murder. Why, sir, a few years ago a man who had not become a citizen of the United States, who had only made a declaration of his intention to become such, was seized by the Austrian authorities. I refer to Martin Koszta. The Austrian authorities attempted to take him because of some crime alleged to have been committed against that government. One of our glorious, noble tars, standing up in the defense of the theory that an American citizen was entitled to the protection of the American flag on the high seas, proposed to pour a broadside into the Austrian craft if Koszta was not delivered up immediately. This action of an American naval officer met with a hearty approval from every American all over this broad land. And so in the case of Dr. Houard, the Virginius prisoners, and a hundred of instances that have occurred in the history of this country. Yet when in 1875 the republican party demand of these democratic revolutionists at the South, these White Leagues and assassins at the South, that they shall respect the life of an American citizen, white or black, this is a "hideous programme," an insult, an outrage upon the chivalric Ku-Klux democracy of the South too intolerable to be borne.

I will not detain the Senate by reading further from this paper. There are several more very important points in it, but I pass on.

I will refer to one other instance of the peaceful condition of Georgia. In August last a body of Georgians from Atlanta invaded the State of South Carolina, and by means of murder and other kinds of violence controlled the election in the interest of the democratic party; and yet the honorable Senator from Georgia would have us understand that the people of Georgia are "law abiding;" that the people of Georgia allow every man to vote as he pleases; that there is no intimidation used to control the vote of the negro or any class of people. We find a band of men known as the Georgia Tigers invade an adjoining State, and undertake to control, and do control, the election of a whole county in South Carolina, and murder men in the attempt. How much this sounds like the old border-ruffian tales from Kansas!

Now I have another little matter, and I am sorry the Senator is not in his seat. I desire to read the statement of a gentleman who is responsible as a "gentleman and a man" for what he says. I am authorized by this gentleman to present this statement to the Senate. In the late canvass in Georgia, in the town of Montezuma, as the distinguished Senator from Georgia was passing through that city, it was arranged that the rail-train should stop and he should make a political speech. On this occasion, I am informed by this gentleman that the honorable Senator used this language, or words of a similar import: "I suppose there is not a white republican in this county," referring to Macon County; "if there is one, the good people of Macon County should drive him from her soil, and not permit him to live there." The gentleman who authorized me to make that statement is, I am informed, a man of high character. His name is Jack Brown; he was the playmate, school-mate, and confederate in the late war of the honorable Senator. And yet the Senator says that in the canvass he made in his State he advocated the right of every man to vote as he pleased; he was opposed to intimidation. We are informed that he stood on the stump in his State and advised his fellow-citizens to acts of violence because of differences in political opinion.

I do not say that the Senator uttered such a sentiment; I give the authority. But I do undertake to say that if the Senator himself never uttered that sentiment, that that kind of doctrine, that kind of sentiment is heard on every stump from democratic orators in every southern State. I have heard it; I have listened to it myself in the State of Mississippi. And yet we are told there is no intimidation!

By the same authority I am informed that in the town of Americus, where I believe the distinguished Senator from Georgia lives, at least two hundred white men would have voted in the recent election for the republican candidate for Congress but for the proscription and ostracism that prevailed. He says, referring to his own son-in-law, who was employed as book-keeper in one of the leading mercantile firms of that city, the firm known as Pickett & King, after the election the democrats of that town, and the democratic press demanded of this mercantile firm that they should discharge this book-keeper, simply because he had voted for his father-in-law, the republican candidate for Congress.

The fact is, as stated by this gentleman, that in the town where the honorable Senator lives, because a man happens to vote for one of his kindred if he is a republican, the democratic press of the town and the whole democratic party of the town, insist that his employers shall discharge him.

The Senator, in speaking of the peaceful condition of affairs in Georgia, referred to the school-houses that dotted it. He said that all over the hills and vales of the State of Georgia were to be found school-houses where the colored people were educated, which was another evidence of the good feeling between the races; and he cited an instance of the benevolence of the southern people. He called the attention of the Senate to one benevolent man who had donated $100,000 to endow certain eleemosynary institutions for the colored people. Upon examination I find that this man's name was Lamar, Mr. G. B. Lamar, that he was the father of the notorious "Charley Lamar," of the "Wanderer" notoriety, who brought from Africa a cargo of slaves a few years before the war. It turns out that this benevolent individual, who had been a slave-trader all his life, amassed his fortune in buying and selling slaves, gave $50,000 to Savannah to found an asylum for indigent negroes, and the same amount for Augusta; and it further appears that this man who donated so liberally to this commendable purpose, was a loyal man during the war, and has recently received several hundred thousand dollars from the United States Treasury for losses incurred during the war. He has founded an asylum for the colored people, and the honorable Senator would have us believe that such benevolence was characteristic of the feeling that exists among our democratic friends at the South toward the negroes in relation to their education. I have some facts on that question; but I will not detain the Senate by reading them, but I beg leave to incorporate them in my speech.

I desire to refer the Senate to the condition of education in the Southern States, and I take this occasion to say that in almost every instance (and I know whereof I affirm, because I have had the honor to be connected with the educational interests of the South) when those States were reconstructed there was no such thing as an efficient school system in the South, and in many Southern States there was no such thing known. These States had, with scarcely an exception, no school laws, and where they had, they were practically inoperative; but immediately after reconstruction, in those States which were under republican administration, school-houses were built, educational facilities were provided for the blacks and whites alike.

When the State of Mississippi was reconstructed, there was not a single free school in the State. Under republican administration, in three years over two thousand school-houses were built and over three thousand schools were organized. Nearly one hundred thousand children were receiving tuition in the schools under the patronage of a republican administration. The same was true of Tennessee in 1868; but when the power passed from the republican party into the hands of the democracy, one of their first acts was to close the schools. The schools were broken up, and not until quite recently have the people of Tennessee paid any attention to the revival of their school system. This was true also of Georgia. Under republican rule schools were established. As soon as the State passed into the hands of the democrats the schools were practically abolished; and they have to-day a mere nominal school system. I undertake to say, that the different benevolent and educational associations in the North have contributed more money to support the education of the colored children and the white children in the State of Georgia, than the democratic party have ever contributed during the whole history of that State. The same is true of Texas. The amount of the Peabody fund distributed in the South since the war is $3,500,000. The contributions for educational purposes at the South by the American Missionary Association of the North since the war have amounted to $1,663,000. The General Government expended, through the Freedmen's Bureau, nearly $6,000,000 for educational purposes in the South. In the six months ending June 30, 1869, northern or foreign benevolence had contributed $365,000 for the education of southern youth, white and colored. During the last ten years the same benevolence has contributed, aside from the Peabody gift, over $8,000,000 for southern education; and nearly all these contributions have come from republican sources.

In the State of Mississippi, when the democratic party began to feel that they were coming again into power and the Ku-Klux organizations were being formed, instead, as the honorable Senator would have us believe that the southern people were anxious to educate the negro and the masses of the people, the Ku-Klux democracy burned our school-houses. Over fifty school-houses, including church buildings used for schools by the negroes, were burned in Mississippi by these lawless bands; and it is the same class of men who are foremost in the White League movement to-day.

I append a statement of the condition and progress of free schools in the South, made up from official sources, which will fully substantiate my remarks upon this subject:

ARKANSAS.

First public school-house in the State was built by the freedmen in 1864. No free public schools for white or colored children until after the war.—Report Superintendent Freedmen's Schools Arkansas, 1864.

On her admission to the Union, in 1836, Arkansas received 928,000 acres of land from the General Government to aid free schools; at the same time two townships to establish a seminary of learning; afterward seventy-two sections of saline lands in aid of education. For more than thirty years no free schools were established. The first effective system was established by republican administration in 1868. In 1870 there were in the State 1,289 school-houses erected since the war; there were 2,537 schools in operation. In 1872 there were 1,292 school-houses, whose value exceeded $255,000. In 1871 there were about 70,000 pupils in the schools. These results were achieved during six years of republican rule and under adverse circumstances.—Reports Superintendent Public Instruction Arkansas, 1868 to 1873.

GEORGIA.

Before the war Georgia had no effective free-school system. During the short period of republican administration after the war 816 free public schools were established, in which were taught about 40,000 pupils.—Report of J. R. Lewis, State Superintendent of Education.

As soon as the democrats gained political control the public Schools began to languish, and were generally discontinued throughout the State in 1872, the school fund having been diverted from its proper purpose.—Report State Superintendent Public Instruction.

In one year 10 school-houses and 1 church used for school purposes were burned by white men in Georgia. This was the second year after the war.—Report Inspector of Schools Freedmen's Bureau, July, 1867.

In 1867 a northern benevolent society sustained two schools for poor whites, numbering 255 pupils, at Atlanta.—Report Inspector of Schools Freedmen's Bureau, 1868.

LOUISIANA.

Outside of New Orleans there was no system of free schools before the war. In 1873, 101 school-houses were built, 864 schools in operation, 1,474 teachers employed, and 57,433 pupils taught. The lands appropriated by Congress to aid public schools had been so unwisely managed as to render little or no aid prior to 1870.—Reports Superintendent Public Instruction Louisiana, 1870–'73.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

In 1870, 110 school-houses were built, 630 free public schools maintained, 734 teachers employed, and 23,441 pupils taught.—Report of Superintendent Public Instruction State of South Carolina, 1870–'71.

TENNESSEE.

Tennessee had no efficient free-school system until 1867. In twenty-two months under republican supervision 3,903 schools had been started; 4,614 teachers employed, 185,845 pupils taught; during the same time 629 school-houses have been erected, of which 61 were "burnt or destroyed" during the same period.—Report Superintendent Public Instruction Tennessee, October, 1869.

As soon as the State passed under democratic control the school law was repealed, and the system in vogue before the war re-established. The first report after this change showed that but twenty-three counties out of ninety-four levied any tax for school purposes. Number of schools reported 478; the enumeration of scholastic population was 165,067, against 418,729 in 1869.—Report Superintendent Public Instruction Tennessee, 1872.

Granger County, Tennessee, in 1869, had 46 white and 8 colored schools, with 4,125 white pupils and 450 colored. In 1872 the superintendent reports "3 schools; scholastic population about 3,200; no school tax voted."—Comparison of above reports.

Dyer County, in 1869, had 41 schools, 43 teachers, 1,389 pupils; in 1871 it had no public schools, and the county refused to vote a school tax.—Comparison of above reports.

TEXAS.

Free-school system established in 1871, and under its operation 129,542 pupils had been gathered in schools before September of that year. In May, 1872, 1,521 schools had been organized, 2,299 teachers employed, and 84,007 pupils taught. In 1873 the school law was so amended as to almost destroy the efficiency of the system. Thus in September, 1871, there were 587 schools, with 28,800 pupils. In September, 1873, there were 85 schools, with 2,913 pupils; while the number of teachers employed had decreased from 710 in 1871 to 98 in 1873. In 1871 Texas had but one or two public school-houses. About 5,000,000 acres of land were set apart for educational purposes. In 1858 a law was passed appropriating the proceeds of the sale of all public lands to the educational fund; but during the rebellion this revenue, amounting to $236,000, was diverted from its purpose to assist in carrying on the war against the Government. Of the permanent schoool fund $1,285,327 was diverted from its purpose and used in the same manner. Seven hundred and seventy-six thousand seven hundred dollars of United States indemnity bonds belonging to the school fund were also disposed of in like manner.—See Official Reports Superintendent of Public Instruction Texas for 1871, 1872, 1873.

THE SOUTH.

Amount of Peabody fund, $3,500,000.—Appleton's Cyclopedia, 1869.

Contributions to educational work in the South by the American Missionary Association $1,663,000 in ten years; expended for education by the General Government through the Freedmen's Bureau about $6,000,000.—Report Commissioner of Education, 1871, page 15, note.

In six months, ending June 30, 1869, northern and foreign benevolence had contributed $365,000 for the education of southern youth, white and colored.—Report Inspector of Schools Freedmen's Bureau, 1869.

During the last ten years the same benevolence has contributed, aside from Peabody's gift, over $8,000,000 for southern education.—Reports of American Missionary Association, Freedmen's Aid Societies and Church Missionary Boards.

Now, sir, suppose we admit, as the Senator from Georgia claims, that the people of his section are wronged, maligned, subjected to misgovernment, "a foot-ball for political adventurers." That there has been some bad government in the South no one denies. There is no question but that there has been in quite too many instances of questionable management of the public funds; but I undertake to say, that in almost every case where the public treasuries of the Southern States have been robbed or plundered, it has been done to a greater or less extent, by democrats or their agents. In almost every instance some democrat has had an interest in the schemes of robbery and extravagance. There is hardly an exception.

The democratic party seek to divert attention from the real issue in the South, by parading what they call "misrule," "radical thieving," "negro domination" in the South as a palliation for outrages and crime. They allege that the people are being plundered by "strangers," "adventurers," and plunderers, as the Senator from Georgia denominates the northern immigrants and Federal officers who have settled in the South since the war. And for this reason the southern democracy are justified in organizing themselves into secret bands for the purpose of murder, assassination, and revolution; justified in attempting in defiance of law to overturn existing State and municipal governments. I will repeat, that if you take the history of the South since reconstruction, and there is scarcely an exception to the rule, where a large State debt has been imposed, and excessive taxes levied, the democracy are to a greater or less extent responsible. Those who have been most interested in procuring legislation granting subsidies to one franchise and another, and who have been the principal beneficiaries of these schemes, are democrats, who are howling to-day about robbery and corruption in the South. I make the statement without fear of successful controversy, that at least one-half of the indebtedness of the Southern States has been brought upon them in granting subsidies to railroad corporations, and no republican, white or colored, have received any part of the spoils.

For an illustration take the city of Charleston. I am informed by reliable authority that the people of that city, with a view to revive commerce and to attract capital, voted large sums of money as an inducement for capitalists to open railway communication. What is true of that city is true of Savannah, and true of nearly every other southern city.

In the campaign of 1872, in every democratic newspaper were exhibited tables comparing the condition of the Southern States before the war under democratic rule with republican rule since reconstruction. They attempted to make it appear that the republicans were absolutely bankrupting those States.

The State of Louisiana, which has been held up as a special victim of radical misrule, in about eighteen months under democratic rule, when not a carpet-bagger or negro had anything to do with State affairs, but under a democratic administration was plunged in debt nearly $18,000,000; and of the debt that hangs over Louisiana to-day, which the democracy parade so much before the American people as an evidence of the outrage perpetrated upon the poor people of the South, more than one-half her indebtedness was contracted in eighteen months under democratic rule. These are facts that cannot be controverted. Lest this may be doubted, I submit a tabular statement of each item of expenditure, which, however, I will not detain the Senate to read.

The Legislature that made the above appropriation was elected in 1865, and was almost unanimously democratic, composed mostly of such old leading democrats as J. M. Lapeyre, D. F. Kenner, A. Voorhies, J. B. Eustis, W. B. Eagan, and John McEnery. We have seen at the extra session of December, 1865, they appropriated $1,177,546.17; in 1866, $5,300,399.75; in 1867, $10,651,608.90; making a total of $17,129,554.82 appropriated by a single Legislature almost unanimously democratic.

Now permit me to present a few facts relating to the political condition of Louisiana before the war. It is represented that all was peaceable when honesty and intelligence controlled. Our democratic friends hold up the present demoralized condition of the State as the result of oppressive legislation and misgovernment under republican rule since the war.

Gayarre, the historian, referring to the condition of affairs in Louisiana in 1856, says: that Governor Herbert, in his valedictory message, referred with deep mortification to the scenes of intimidation, violence, and bloodshed which had marked the late general elections in New Orleans.

He said that the repetition of such outrages would tarnish our national character and sink us to the level of the anarchical governments of Spanish America; that before the occurrence of those "great public crimes," the hideous deformity of which he could not describe and which were committed with impunity in midday light and in the presence of hundreds of persons, no one could have admitted even the possibility that a blood-thirsty mob could have contemplated to overawe any portion of the people of this State in the exercise of their most valuable rights; "but that what would then have been denied, even as a possibility, is now a historical fact."

Referring to the internal condition of the State, Governor Wickliffe said:

> Bountiful as nature has been to Louisiana, the skill of the engineer is still essential to her full development. With twenty-five millions of acres of fertile lands, hardly a tenth is in cultivation; with a sea-coast a third in length of the State, we have a tonnage almost in its infancy. With capacity to produce all the cotton needed for the British Empire and all the sugar required for this great confederation, we are as yet but laggards in their growth. With thousands of miles of internal navigation, our productions frequently can find no market, and North and South Louisiana are strangers to each other. Toward the cultivation of these millions of acres, toward the improvement of these miles of navigation, toward cementing together these sections, discreet and timely legislation can do much. As yet nothing, absolutely nothing, has been accomplished. A fund for internal improvement has existed for years. Large amounts of it have been expended. Yet it would be difficult for even a curious inquirer to discover any benefit that has resulted from it.

These were sad truths from the lips of the chief magistrate. He further said:

> It is passing strange that, in a popular government, without privileged classes, without stipendiaries on the bounty of the State, mismanagement and recklessness should be tolerated.

Although the presidential election which had secured the success of the democratic party, represented by James Buchanan, to which Governor Wickliffe also refers, had been considered as determining whether the Southern States should continue or not to remain in the Union, and although it had been for this reason the most important which had been held since the foundation of the Federal Government, yet out of 11,817 votes registered in the city of New Orleans only 8,333 were cast, showing apparently at least an inexplicable apathy on the part of 3,484 citizens. The governor commented on this regrettable fact in the following language:

> It demonstrates that some extraordinary cause was at work to prevent a large proportion of lawful voters from enjoying the sacred franchise of the Constitution. It is well known that at the two last general elections many of the streets and approaches to the polls were completely in the hands of organized ruffians, who committed acts of violence on multitudes of our naturalized fellow-citizens who dared venture to exercise the right of suffrage.
> Thus nearly one-third of the registered voters of New Orleans have been deterred from exercising their highest and most sacred prerogative. The expression of such elections is an open and palpable fraud on the people, and I recommend you to adopt such measures as shall effectually prevent the true will of the majority from being totally silenced.

The evil pointed out by the governor was of the utmost magnitude, but there was one still more dangerous than any which resulted from open violence. It was that corruption which enabled foreigners just landing on our shores to vote, and which put two or three thousand illegal voters at the disposal of whatever party had the means of buying them. This was the main cause, which, by producing intense disgust, went much further than fear of assassination to prevent honest citizens from resorting to the ballot-box. They knew all our elections to have become so hopelessly fraudulent that it was disgraceful to participate in them, and had retired from the political arena in sullen dispair.

Again permit me to refer to the State of Mississippi, which I have the honor in part to represent. The State of Mississippi, under democratic rule, in the days when "honesty and intelligence" (in the language of the Senator from Georgia) ruled and controlled that country—in about nine years of democratic rule, the democratic party absolutely squandered and robbed that State of nearly $20,000,000; and during a period of thirty-five years of democratic rule in Mississippi they absolutely plundered and squandered $40,000,000! To prove this, I cite my honorable colleague [Mr. ALCORN] who, when a candidate for governor in 1869, in an able speech, arraigned the democratic party, (the leaders of which are the very men who are to-day furnishing the pabulum for democratic newspapers North in the cry of "thief," "plunderer," and like epithets,) proved and demonstrated—and there was not a democrat in Mississippi who could controvert his statement—that the democratic party had stolen out of the trust funds and squandered the public funds of that State to the amount of $40,000,000. And because in the State of South Carolina, under negro rule, as it is called, the State has contracted a debt of a few millions of dollars, the most unheard of and terrible misrule in the history of this government is complained of!

Mr. President, I will cite an authority which will not be questioned by our democratic friends as to the condition of Mississippi in 1838, in the palmy days of democratic rule in that State. No negro domination or radical rule is here portrayed, but pure, unadulterated democratic administration. Governor McNutt, in his message to the Legislature, says: "He could not ascertain the true situation of the State treasurer's books. The total receipts into the treasury from the 7th of December, 1837, to 31st of December, 1838, amounted to $196,919.96, and the disbursements $350,644.19, showing an excess of expenditures over receipts of upward of $150,000." And referring to a democratic auditor of public accounts, John H. Malory, he says:

> It appears that he is a defaulter to the amount of $54,079.96. The trust imposed has been sadly abused, and he has been enabled thus long to conceal his defalcation.

Again, showing the condition of the administration of justice at that time, on page 31, senate journal, we find the governor making use of the following:

> Sheriffs and coroners have resigned about the commencement of the court for the evident purpose of preventing the term being held, and thus defeating the regular administration of the laws.

Further evidence of disorganization follows on page 32 of said journal:

> I am advised that the final records of the courts are rarely made up pursuant to law. It is believed that they are imperfect in almost every office of the State. When a new clerk comes into office he finds the fees for such service collected and the work undone. He refuses, therefore, to bring up the unfinished business of the office, and the records are suffered to remain in their imperfect state.

At page 36 attention is called to the "judicial legislation" of the high court, superior court of chancery, and several circuit courts. The complaint is that "in many cases parties are prohibited from being heard by counsel in open court, but are required to submit written arguments and briefs," precluding a reply to the arguments and authorities adduced by the opposite party, and placing it "in the power of the judge to overlook the adjudications cited, to the manifest injury of suitors."

Allusion is also made to the probate courts:

Too much power is given to the judge in vacation, and in numerous cases the securities of executors, administrators, and guardians are utterly insolvent when taken.

At page 38 of the senate journal we find the following:

The long list of defaulters given in the auditor's report, and the immense amount of arrearages remaining unpaid, show that something is wrong in the present system. It is outrageous that taxes should be wrung from the hard earnings of the people and squandered by the officers they have chosen to collect them.

Page 39, another extract from the message is as follows:

Thirty-three tax collectors are in default the sum of $90,617.46 for taxes accruing prior to the year 1838; suits have been ordered against them on their bonds. Twenty-six tax collectors are in default in the sum of $26,980.27 for taxes assessed in the year 1838. It is believed that these sums fall far short of the actual defalcations. Immense sums are yearly collected which are not returned on the roll of the assessors, and under the existing laws it is impracticable to bring officers thus in default to account.

The following extracts from the message of Governor McNutt, (senate journal of 1842, page 15,) reveal a sad state of public affairs, and show conclusively that no improvement had taken place in the administration of the government during his four years' of service:

The duties of many of our officers are for long periods of time performed by deputies and clerks. If they are competent to discharge such duties, they deserve the salaries drawn by their principals; if undeserving, they are unfit to be intrusted with the management of such important offices.

Relative to the auditor, treasurer, and secretary of state, he says:

They frequently absent themselves for long periods of time without even notifying the executive of their intentions. During their absence the business of their offices is left in the charge of clerks who neither give bonds nor take the oath of office. Under such circumstances the public business is often neglected and the funds of the State endangered.

It is further stated (page 16) that thousands of dollars are annually lost to the State by delays and failures in the prosecution of suits by the district attorneys against defaulters. A suit had been pending on the bond of a defaulting auditor (who owed the State upward of $50,000) three years; the State employed assistant counsel, but no judgment was obtained. In the mean time the securities of the defaulter had become insolvent, and the whole claim good for nothing. In another place (page 14) we find that assessors and collectors resign and no tax-rolls are returned, &c.

Again—let me cite you another case. The good old Commonwealth of Virginia, which has never been misgoverned by carpet-baggers, radicals, and negroes, that State to-day, so far as its financial condition is concerned, has more than double the debt of any Southern State under a republican administration. Her indebtedness is over $45,000,000; and yet an attempt has been made to convince the American people that the republican party of the South have been plunging those States into an indebtedness and bankruptcy without parallel and beyond precedent. But in Virginia they see no bankruptcy, no misrule. It makes a great difference whether a democrat steals or a republican, and of the two I am inclined to think that a republican thief is the more culpable.

Here are the debts of the Southern States as given in Poor's Manual of Railroads for the year 1874–'75, the latest authority on the subject:

Alabama	$11,258,836 07
Arkansas	10,885,000 00
Georgia	14,871,064 00
Kentucky	2,720,710 00
Louisiana	22,308,800 00
Maryland	10,741,210 60
Mississippi	No debt stated
North Carolina	29,547,045 00
South Carolina	20,650,235 00
Tennessee	20,966,382 19
Virginia	45,718,112 23

Mr. President, I will now cite a case or two of the management of the municipal affairs of some of our southern cities. The city of Louisville, Kentucky. That city has five times the indebtedness of the State of Mississippi, and it has always been under democratic control. Take the city of New Orleans. That city has never been under the control of republicans, and the indebtedness of that city alone, I am informed, is greater than the whole indebtedness of the entire State of Louisiana.

So much for the honest, economical management of the democracy in the control of the finances of the South. I know of my own personal knowledge in the State of Mississippi, that in almost every case where there has been a job, where colored officials have been imposed upon, the men who have profited by these schemes and appropriations of the public funds and plunderings, if you please, have been democrats, who are to-day leaders in that party. The men who have thus enriched themselves are the men who are leading the white-leaguers in their bloody work in Mississippi and in other portions of the South. I do not know of a single northern man or a single southern man who has been connected with the republican party, and is in good standing with the party to-day who has made a dollar that was not legitimately and honestly made; but I do know that various attempts have been made by democrats of that State to secure legislation in favor of various kinds of schemes by which they might be benefited. Why, sir, the city of Vicksburgh is indebted to-day several hundred thousand dollars in bonds issued for internal improvements and railroads, and democrats, white-leaguers, have been the principal beneficiaries of these city grants; and yet the indebtedness of the city of Vicksburgh and the county is paraded by the Associated Press and the democracy of this country as a justification for violently driving their sheriff from office and turning out of office the men that the people have elected, and are even set up as a complete defense for murder and assassination. Much of the clamor about taxation in the South is greatly overdrawn. I present to the Senate the following tabulated statements, compiled from the last census, which I have obtained from an able article published in the New York Nation dated March 28, 1872. Although figures show taxation to be high in the South, yet it is certainly not so alarmingly out of ratio with other communities as to justify the lawlessness that exists. It appears even that certain Northern States are taxed higher than any Southern State.

One thing further about taxation in my own State. We see a great deal in the way of testimony before congressional committees and in other ways about the taxation on real estate having increased in Mississippi from one mill to twelve or fourteen mills, the present State tax. Sir, this is strictly true. Taxation in Mississippi on real estate has been increased tenfold, I do not doubt, and I will tell you how and why. Before the war, when that State was absolutely controlled by an oligarchy of twenty-five thousand democratic land-owners, they adopted a revenue system that placed all the burdens of government upon the industry and enterprise of the country, while property, wealth, was almost completely exempted. Under that system the tax upon real estate was limited by law at $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent. and the land owner fixed his own valuation upon his land. Lands whose actual valuation was in some instances fifty dollars per acre were assessed at fifty cents per acre. Why, sir, under that system of taxation a poor, free negro barber, whose property consisted of a razor, shaving-brush, and comb, paid more revenue to the State government than a democratic planter worth $10,000 in negroes and lands. As an exhibit of the equitable mode of taxation in the palmy days of democratic rule in Mississippi, I read from the provisions of the revenue laws of Mississippi as they existed prior to reconstruction:

Auctioneers, 2 per cent. on gross sales; stocks, 3 mills on the dollar; banks, $5.0; brokers, 3 mills on their gross sales; mechanics, (including milliners,) ¼ of 1 per cent; on sales of merchandise, 3 mills; on all transient sales, except mules and horses, 2 per cent. on gross sales; livery and sales stables, 2 per cent. on gross receipts of regular business, and on sales 3 mills; telegraph companies, 2 per cent. on gross receipts of each office; each billiard table, $100; exhibitions, $25 per day; confectionery and barber shops, $25; expresss companies, $1,000 each; pleasure carriages, clocks, watches, gold or silver coin, gold or silver plate above the value of fifty dollars, and pianos, 5 mills; gross receipts of all ferries, bridges, turnpikes, or other places where a fee is collected from the passer, 5 mills; on the value of all solvent credits, ¼ of 1 per cent.; cotton grown prior to 1866, $1 per bale; cotton grown after 1866, 50 cents per bale; all cattle over twenty in number, 5 cents per head; all saddle and carriage horses, diamonds and jewelry, 1 per cent. of their value; household furniture over $1,000, 1 per cent.; breweries, $100; distilleries, $100, and $2 per gallon upon the capacity of each still; druggists, upon sales of paints, oils, and glass, 3 mills, and upon all other sales 1 per cent.; on all horses and mules brought into the State for sale, $1; inns, taverns, hotels, or boarding-houses, 1 per cent.; on sales of liquors and wines over one gallon, 5 per cent; on gross earnings of physicians, lawyers, and dentists, 1 per cent.; eating-house or restaurant, $50; on manufacturers, 20 cents on each $100 in value of their several productions; photographers, $50; race-tracks, $100; each raft of logs, 10 cents for each tier of six logs; all salaries, 5 mills; theatres, $10 per day; on any show or performance, where compensation is charged, (except for benevolent or charitable objects,) $10; each peddler, $200, except where he exclusively sells the products of this State, then 3 mills upon gross sales; insurance agencies, 5 mills upon gross receipts; each hack, cab, carriage, or omnibus used for transporting passengers, $5 per head on horses drawing same; drays or wagons used for transporting freight, if drawn by one horse, $5, if drawn by two horses, $10; on each wharf-boat, $10; for every steamboat or flat-boat which may land at said wharf-boat, $1; on gross sales of trade boats, 5 mills; on water-craft engaged in the gulf or coast trade—steamboats, $250; all other boats, over sixty and under one hundred tons, $30; over forty tons and under sixty, $20; all under twenty tons, $10; every stallion or jack, the price which may be charged for the season; ten-pin alley, $50; on every license granted—by any county, city, or town having a population of two thousand, $500; if one thousand and under two thousand, $200; in all other places, $100; news depots, $10; playing-cards, 50 cents; on gross amount of prizes, 5 per cent; on each juggler, magician, or sleight-of-hand performer, $100; poll tax, $2; dogs, 40 cents; ½ per cent. per mile on all travelers over railroads; on fees of officers, 3 mills; ½ of 1 per cent. on all moneys loaned; on all physicians who advertise their special cures, $25 per month; vendors of ice-cream upon the street, $25 per month, in advance; on all bequests and inheritances, 1 per cent; each pistol, having one or more barrels, $2; single barrel, $1; shot-gun, rifle, or army guns 50 cents; bowie-knife, sword-cane, or dirk, $2; on all rents, 3 mills.

All subjects of taxation above enumerated were liable to taxation by the counties, in addition to that of the State, and collected in the same manner. The taxation on property was limited, as I have before stated, to $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent.

It is one of the chief glories of republican reconstruction in that State that it has wiped out this unequitable system of taxation and placed the burdens of Government where they belong—on wealth and not on industry.

I might startle the Senate by some illustrations of the practical workings of this system as the records show them, but I will not dwell on results which are self-evident. The bad faith of the democratic press of the country in concealing material facts and parading alleged increase of taxation in Mississippi, on real estate, as an evidence of corrupt administration is only one of the numerous methods which they have adopted to impose upon the credulity of the northern people. The increase on wealth or property has been an act of justice.

The honorable Senator from Georgia speaks of oppression in his State. Sir, I will now call the attention of the Senator to a class of people who are indeed oppressed in his State and plundered of their substance, and whose daily toil is no guarantee against daily oppression. I refer to a half million of colored people. So grievous are their wrongs that they are leaving the State. The statistics will show that during the last eight or ten years thousands of the laboring population of Georgia have fled because of oppression, many of whom are settling in Mississippi. The Vicksburgh and Meridian Railroad, in Mississippi, transported several thousand emigrants from Georgia over its line last year. All these immigrants, as they passed through our State, told the same story of oppression. They said: "The colored people have no rights which a Georgia democrat is bound to respect. We are seeking a country where we can have civil liberty, enjoy the privileges of freemen, and eat in peace the bread our own hands have earned."

Mr. President, in this connection allow me to refer to a convention recently held in Georgia—a convention of Georgia democratic planters; and to show the animus of that convention toward the negro, I will quote the language of one of the speakers, a Mr. W. D. Murray. In his address Mr. Murray said:

I have practiced whipping some of my negroes lately, and I always make the victims promise not to prosecute me while the chastisement is going on. In this way I manage to keep my negroes under perfect control.

There is the statement of a Georgia planter, made only a few days ago in a convention in Georgia. Yet we are informed by the honorable Senator from Georgia that the negro is treated well in that State; that he is protected in all his civil and political privileges in Georgia. Another speaker, one Mr. Stafford, said he was in favor of memorializing the State Legislature to pass a law making it a misdemeanor to entice laborers away from Georgia farmers, inducing them to move westward.

I will read an extract from the Atlanta Herald upon this subject:

The negro is remarkable for his love of locality. He generally prefers to stay around the old farm place where he was raised, and will do so unless all the conditions tempt him to leave it. The single obstacle of full, high-priced railroad fare would settle the matter with two-thirds of them.

It is a notorious fact that in many districts where the colored people are in large majorities the right to vote is abridged by the whites through one device and another.

But, says the honorable Senator, "Under the wise administration of the government of Georgia their lands are so valuable that a negro cannot buy them, and because of the maladministration of affairs in republican Mississippi, lands can be bought there for five cents an acre." Well, Mr. President, I am not surprised to learn that land is held at a very high value by a Georgia democratic planter when a negro proposes to buy it, for they maintain the same doctrine that they advocated in 1865, when they attempted to prohibit the negro from purchasing land by law.

I call the attention of the honorable Senator to the value of land in Georgia as compared with the land in Mississippi. According to the census report of 1870 I find the aggregate value of land in Georgia to be $268,469,207; in Mississippi, $209,197,345. Georgia contains nearly twice the area of Mississippi, and it is a much older State; and yet the lands in Mississippi are nearly as valuable in the aggregate as those in the large State of Georgia. I leave the Senator to draw his own conclusions as to the comparative value of land in the face of these statistical facts.

Sir, the colored Georgian comes to Mississippi for his rights, not for land. Not one in a thousand of the poor negro immigrants under the benign, wise, and prosperous democratic administration in Georgia has been able to accumulate money enough to buy land even at five cents an acre. They bring to Mississippi muscle and labor, and we in return give them liberty, equal personal privileges and rights, under the laws of our State.

The Senator vaunts before the American Senate and the country that in Georgia "no negro sits at a white man's table," and that in Mississippi social equality obtains, and that is one of the reasons he assigns for the rapid emigration from this State. He represented to the Senate that because of the inducements of social equality held out in the State of Mississippi, because the negro was allowed, as he had been informed, "a seat at the white man's table," he was leaving Georgia. The Senator said "There is no such equality between white men and negroes in Georgia, thank God!" He had heard that it is different in Mississippi. Mr. President, I undertake to say, and I believe, that it is different in degree. I trust it is. I take this occasion to say that some of the most highly esteemed citizens of Mississippi, men who are "to the manner born," who in the question of blood, brains, and bullion will compare with any of our friends of Georgia, have so far rid themselves of irrational prejudices as to recognize the claims of the colored man to equal privileges at theaters, on steamboats, and in hotels, and allow the people to enjoy equal privileges. In the State of Mississippi we have a civil-rights law that gives to all our citizens equal privileges, equal rights, and equal protection. I am happy to say that in the State of Mississippi, in some degree at least, a man is esteemed by the standard of character, of manhood, and not by the color of his skin. Virtue, intelligence, and patriotism are appreciated in Mississippi though they are inclosed in a colored skin. I can readily understand and most fully appreciate how honorable and high-minded men can shrink from contact with the low and the base, with murderers and assassins, be they black or white; but I fail to estimate highly the arrogant assumption which vaunts itself that a man is too good to associate with his equals, and perhaps superiors, because of a difference in the color of his skin. I will presume to say that the American Senate places no very high value on any such display of accidental superiority. From my observation I do not understand that the colored people of Georgia, or anywhere else in this country, have any very inordinate desire to be entertained at the white man's table; but they do desire to be recognized and protected in their rights under American law the same as their white people. That is the kind of equality the colored people of the South seek. They seek it in Georgia, but they seek in vain. They come to Mississippi and they have these rights, and they will continue to have them if the American Congress and the American people can be led to appreciate the present condition of affairs and give us protection. But unless we have it, our civil-rights law will be a dead letter. Unless we have that protection, the white-leaguers who have murdered our citizens by the hundreds in the streets of Vicksburgh in the last month will control the State, and the poor negro will be in a worse condition than he was under the service of his former master.

The honorable Senator from Missouri thinks that the colored men ought to divide their votes between the two parties.

The honorable Senator can rest assured of one thing, that the colored people of the South will be very reluctant to divide their votes in favor of a party whose leading representatives in the United States Senate and in the national Capitol proclaim their inferiority and herald their degredation. When the poor negro understands the fact that a democratic Senator can here in this Chamber put himself out of the way to parade the fact that in democratic Georgia white men do not recognize the equality of their colored fellow-citizens, they will be very loth to divide their votes with such a party or to sustain such men.

In this connection, and as an offset to the low estimate the honorable Senator from Georgia places upon his colored constituents, I shall beg the Senate to bear with me while I read the testimony of the Hon. Ellingham Lawrence, of Louisiana, to the good character and rapid progress of the colored citizens of that State. This testimony speaks volumes in favor of the wisdom of reconstruction, and ought to cover with shame the democratic malcontents who would deny him justice and who undertake to grind him down and degrade him. It also shows that among the old-time slave-owners of Louisiana there are some men at least who reprobate the diabolical programme of the white-leaguers.

I read the following extracts from a letter of Mr. Lawrence, published in the New Orleans Republican, August 23, 1874:

The men who, while contemplating the negro emerging from a bondage of centuries and still embarrassed by the presence of ignorance, timidity, and servility that belonged to his former serfdom, and making his first essays as a citizen with the political experience of less than ten years, would correct the mistakes, failures, and imperfect efforts of this brief experimental period, and thereupon institute a contrast between the negro and the white man, and should conclude from such comparison that negro citizenship is a failure, and that the negro should be remitted substantially to his former condition as a political chattel, not a political entity controlling his own action, but a political value to be controlled by white men, ungenerously estimates humanity and but poorly appreciates either the temper of the times or the civilization of the age.

A further serious objection to the race-movement is found in the proscriptive methods suggested by its advocates for controlling the negro vote. They would ostracize the white man who honestly gives counsel to the colored masses, and would withhold employment from the negro worker; and, thus deprived of leadership and impoverished, without homes, and without bread, the negro masses will become docile and easily induced to act in harmony with the resident whites. This is a monstrous proposition, both in the ends contemplated and the dangerous agencies used to accomplish it. It suggests the idea that the man who hires his muscles to honest toil that he may make honest bread sells his conscience as a citizen to the purchaser of his labor, and proposes that no bronzed son of toil shall have awarded to him by the intelligent conservative white men of Louisiana the right of unproscribed work, except on the condition that the worker shall yield to his employer his honest political convictions. If the negro citizen would for an instant yield to the demand thus conditioned, he would prove thereby not only his incompetency for but his unworthiness of citizenship.

In common with my Anglo-Saxon kindred, I am not indifferent to the reputation and claims of my race to pre-eminence, and feel an honorable pride in the fact that I am a Caucasian. But the pride that leads the superior race, exultant in its strength, to domineer over the inferior, is a questionable virtue in the American system.

Like Dr. Taylor, I had the responsibility attaching to the ownership of three hundred slaves, nor could I feel that their emancipation released me from the obligation to care for them. I have deemed it not only expedient but a duty, as opportunity offered, to do what I could for their intelligent advancement in the new sphere in which they as suffragans have been called upon to move.

Nor have I been disappointed in any reasonable expectation relative to them either as a political or industrial element. They have increased in numbers, made creditable progress in education and in the acquisition of the material comforts of life. As an agricultural community, owning comfortable homes and a sufficiency of good lands, supplied with schools and churches at their doors, they are contented and improving; and in thrift, industry, and obedience to law and decorous conduct they will compare favorably with any agricultural community in this or any other State in the Union. I have not attempted to control their party affiliations, nor to suggest how they shall use their franchise, further than to advise them of the importance and necessity of casting their ballots for competent and honest men. They regard me as a friend, and would, I believe, give due consideration to any proper suggestions I might make.

But I state to their credit that no personal friendship for me would induce them either to abandon, as a class, their political convictions or to vote for other than men of their choice. Yet I think they would be perfectly open to frank and kindly appeals which look to the accomplishing friendly relations with the whites and the securement of good local government in the State. I can very readily perceive how the colored men as a class should have given their first political preference to the national party which played so important a part in securing their personal freedom and political rights. And to a simple-minded and trustful race, their surroundings and antecedents considered, any proscriptive or coercive measures, direct or indirect, looking to the control of their political action, seems not only suspicious and threatening, but indicative of a danger to them that will simply drive them furthur from the party so acting.

The honorable Senator makes a plea for peace and reconciliation. In this I join with him most heartily. I had hoped that peace had indeed come when in 1872 the democratic party was utterly vanquished. I congratulated the country upon its demise, particularly the South, which had suffered more than any other part of the country from its political teachings, its corruptions, its treason and rebellion. I hoped that its last chapter of treason and bloodshed had closed, and that a new era of peace had dawned upon the South; but alas the party has revived again, and lo, turmoil and social revolution follow. Intimidation, disorders, prostration of business are upon us.

When business men who come to the country with a view to help revive our waning industries by investing their capital discover disorders; when they witness the terrible murders at Coushatta, the revolt and bloodshed of the 14th of September; when they see all over the country men associating themselves in secret organizations to set the law at defiance; when they see the social revolution, they are not disposed to hazard their capital; for no characteristic of capital is better understood than this: it is always timid in seeking investments. Capital always counts all its surroundings; and I undertake to say that the prospect of a democratic victory in 1876 has done more to paralyze the industries of the South than anything that has happened in the last fifteen months. The panic of 1873 is a simple circumstance, the merest bagatelle, compared to the apprehensions entertained by the business portion of the southern people. They know and feel that a democratic victory would lead to an utter prostration of business in the South.

I again appeal to our southern democratic friends not to indulge in the delusion that the democratic party is now coming into power. This delusion you entertained in 1860. You believed then that the democracy in the North would stand by your revolutionary enterprises. You were told by some of the leading metropolitan journals of the country that if President Lincoln or the republican party should attempt to "coerce a sovereign State" it would prostrate the industries of the North, ruin its commerce, grass would grow in the streets of New York City, the owls and bats would make their nests in the looms of Lowell. Some democratic orator of Illinois said if any of Lincoln's slave-hunting hirelings should attempt to force a State back into the Union they would have to march over the dead bodies of ten thousand Illinoisians; but when in your madness you struck a blow at the Government, when you tore down the flag from Sumter, what was the result? The first men who flew to the capital and tendered their services to the Government were the men who but a few weeks before had been loudest in their professions of sympathy for the South. Prominent leading democrats of the North were here on their knees before Mr. Lincoln pleading for commissions as brigadier or major generals to lead the Yankee Army and strike down with shot and shell the southern insurgents. And so it will turn out in this conspiracy. I will undertake to proffer this advice to our southern democratic friends: do not count too strongly upon the assistance of the northern democracy. Let me remind you that it was upon their pledges of sympathy and support you based the success of your enterprise in 1860.

I tell you the democratic party of the North and the White League democracy of the South are composed of widely different elements. There is patriotism, there is love of order in the democratic party of the North; they have lived under a different kind of civilization; and when your party with its present temper and tendency shall develop its work of revolution, you will find the democratic party of the North will forsake you as they did in 1861.

The democracy of the South during the period of reconstruction and ever since has been antagonistic to the policy of the Government. I will not detain the Senate on this point, but I desire to submit some of the laws that were passed in the different Southern States relating to the liberties of the people, some of the most infamous laws that were ever enacted in the history of civilized legislation.

The following are some of the provisions of the "black code" of Mississippi, denominated in the statute-book "An act to confer civil rights on freedmen, and for other purposes," approved November 24, 1865:

Be it enacted, &c., That all freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes, may sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, in all the courts of law and equity of the State, and may acquire personal property and choses in action by descent or purchase, and may dispose of the same in the same manner as white persons: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not be so construed as to allow any freedman, free negro, or mulatto to rent or lease any lands or tenements except in incorporated towns or cities in which places the corporate authorities shall control the same.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, That every freedman, free negro, and mulatto shall on the second Monday of January, 1866, and annually thereafter, have a lawful home or employment, and shall have written evidence thereof.

SEC. 7. Every civil officer shall, and every person may, arrest and carry back to his or her employer any freedman, free negro, or mulatto who shall have quit the service of his or her employer before the expiration of his or her term of service; and said officer or person shall be entitled to receive for arresting and carrying back every deserting employé aforesaid the sum of five dollars, and ten cents per mile from the place of arrest to the place of delivery, and the same shall be paid by the employer, and held as a set-off for so much against the wages of said employé.

SEC. 8. Upon the affidavit made by the employer of any freedman, free negro, or mulatto, or any credible person, before any justice of the peace, or member of the board of police, that any freedman, free negro, or mulatto employed by said employer has deserted said employment, such justice of the peace, or member of the board of police, shall issue his warrant, returnable before himself or other such officer, directed to any sheriff, constable, or special deputy, commanding him to arrest said deserter and return him or her to said employer, and the same proceedings shall be had as provided in the preceding section. It shall be lawful for any officer to whom such warrant shall be directed to execute said warrant in any county of this State, and said warrant shall be transmitted without indorsement to any like officer of another county, to be executed as aforesaid, and the said employer shall pay the costs, which shall be set off for so much against the wages of said deserter.

SEC. 9. If any person shall knowingly employ any such deserting freedman, free negro, or mulatto, or shall sell to any such freedman, free negro, or mulatto any food, raiment, or other thing, he or she shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars; * * * and if said fine and costs are not immediately paid, the court shall sentence said convict to not exceeding two months imprisonment in the county jail, and he or she shall moreover be liable in damages to the party injured.

Section 2 of an act to amend the vagrant laws of the State provides:

All freedmen, free negroes, or mulattoes in this State over the age of eighteen years found on the second Monday in January, 1866, or thereafter, with no lawful employment or business, or found assembling themselves together either in the day or night time shall be deemed vagrants, and on conviction shall be fined fifty dollars. * * * * * * *

SEC. 5. That all fines collected under the provisions of this act shall be paid into the county treasury for general county purposes, and in case any freedman, free negro, or mulatto shall fail for five days after the imposition of any fine or forfeiture upon him or her for violation of any of the provisions of this act to pay the same, then it shall be, and is hereby, made the duty of the sheriff of the proper county to hire out said freedman, free negro, or mulatto to any person who will for the shortest period of service pay said fine or forfeiture and all costs. Preference shall be given to the employer, if there be one, in which case he shall be entitled to deduct and retain the amount so paid from the wages of such freedman, free negro, or mulatto then due or to become due; and in case such freedman, free negro, or mulatto cannot be hired out, he or she may be dealt with as a pauper.

SEC. 6. In order to secure a support for such indigent freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes, it shall be lawful, and it is hereby made the duty of the boards of county police of each county in this State, to levy a poll or capitation tax on each and every freedman, free negro, or mulatto, between the ages of eighteen and sixty years, of one dollar annually to each person so taxed, which when collected shall be paid into the county treasurer's hands and constitute a fund to be called the "freedmen's pauper fund," which shall be applied by the commissioners of the poor for the maintenance of the poor of the freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes of this State, under such regulations as may be established by the boards of county police in the respective counties of this State.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, That if any freedman, free negro, or mulatto shall fail or refuse to pay any tax levied according to the provisions of the sixth section of this act, it shall be prima facie evidence of vagrancy, and it shall be the duty of the sheriff to arrest such freedman, free negro, or mulatto, or such person refusing or neglecting to pay such tax, and proceed at once to hire for the shortest time such delinquent tax-payer to any one who will pay the said tax with accruing costs, giving preference to the employer if there be one.

The same kind of legislation adopted in Mississippi was enacted in all the other Southern States. I call attention to the character of this legislation in the various States, which I will not detain the Senate by reading but ask the Clerk to insert.

ALABAMA.

Bill passed making it unlawful for any freedman, mulatto, or free person of color in this State to own fire-arms, or carry about his person a pistol or other deadly weapon, under a penalty of a fine of $100 or imprisonment three months. Also, making it unlawful for any person to sell, give, or lend fire-arms or ammunition of any description whatever to any freedman, free negro, or mulatto, under a penalty of not less than fifty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars at the discretion of the jury.

TENNESSEE.

January 25, 1866, this bill became a law:

That persons of African and Indian descent are hereby declared to be competent witnesses in all the courts of this State in as full a manner as such persons are by an act of Congress competent witnesses in all the courts of the United States, and all laws and parts of laws of the State excluding such persons from competency are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to give colored persons the right to vote, hold office, or sit on juries in this State; and that this provision is inserted by virtue of the provision of the ninth section of the amended constitution, ratified February 22, 1865.

LOUISIANA.

December 21 this bill became a law:

SECTION 1. That any one who shall persuade or entice away, feed, harbor, or secrete any person who leaves his or her employer, with whom she or he has contracted or is assigned to live, or any apprentice who is bound as an apprentice, without the permission of his or her employer, said person or persons so offending shall be liable for damages to the employer, and also, upon conviction thereof, shall be subject to pay a fine of not more than $500 nor less than ten dollars, or imprisonment in the parish jail for not more than twelve months nor less than ten days, or both, at the discretion of the court.

GEORGIA.

March 20, 1866.—Crimes defined in certain sections named as felonies are reduced below felonies, and all other crimes punishable by fine or imprisonment, or either, shall be likewise punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000, imprisonment not exceeding six months, whipping not exceeding thirty-nine lashes, to work in a chain-gang on the public works not to exceed twelve months; and any one or more of these punishments may be ordered in the discretion of the judge.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

An act preliminary to the legislation induced by the emancipation of slaves, October 19, 1865.

Section 10 provides that a person of color who is in the employment of a master engaged in husbandry shall not have the right to sell any corn, rice, pease, wheat, or other grain, any flour, cotton, fodder, hay, bacon, fresh meat of any kind, animal of any kind, or any other product of a farm, without having written evidence from such master, or some person authorized by him, or from the district judge or a magistrate, that he has the right to sell such product; and if any person shall, directly or indirectly, purchase any such product from such person of color without such written evidence, the purchaser and seller shall each be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Section 13 states that persons of color constitute no part of the militia of the State, and no one of them shall, without permission in writing from the district judge or magistrate, be allowed to keep a fire-arm, sword, or other military weapon, except that one of them, who is the owner of a farm, may keep a shot-gun or rifle, such as is ordinarily used in hunting, but not a pistol, musket, or other fire-arm or weapon appropriate for purposes of war. The district judge or a magistrate may give an order, under which any weapon unlawfully kept may be seized and sold, the proceeds of sale to go into the district court fund. The possession of a weapon in violation of this act shall be a misdemeanor which shall be tried before a district court or magistrate, and in case of conviction, shall be punished by a fine equal to twice the value of the weapon so unlawfully kept, and if that be not immediately paid, by corporal punishment.

Section 22 provides that no person of color shall migrate into and reside in this State unless, within twenty days after his arrival within the same, he shall enter into a bond, with two freeholders as sureties, to be approved by the judge of a district court or a magistrate, in a penalty of $1,000, conditioned for his good behavior and for his support, if he should become unable to support himself.

Section 27 provides that whenever, under any law, sentence imposing a fine is passed, if the fine and costs be not immediately paid, there shall be detention of the convict, and substitution of other punishment. If the offense should not involve the crimen falsi, and be infamous, the substitution shall be, in the case of a white person, imprisonment for a time proportioned to the fine, at the rate of one day for each dollar; and in the case of a person of color enforced labor, without unnecessary pain or restraint, for a time proportioned to the fine, at the rate of one day for each dollar. But if the offense should be infamous, there shall be substituted for a fine, for imprisonment, or for both, hard labor, corporal punishment, solitary confinement, and confinement in tread-mill or stocks one or more days, at the discretion of the judge of the superior court, the district judge, or the magistrate who pronounces the sentence. In this act, and in respect to all crimes and misdemeanors, the term servants shall be understood to embrace an apprentice as well as a servant under contract.

December 21: An act to establish and regulate the domestic relations of persons of color, and to amend the law in relation to paupers and vagrancy.

A parent may bind his child over two years of age as an apprentice to serve till twenty-one if a male, eighteen if a female. All persons of color who make contracts for service or labor shall be known as servants, and those with whom they contract as masters.

Colored children between eighteen and twenty-one who have neither father nor mother living in the district in which they are found, or whose parents are paupers, or unable to afford them a comfortable maintenance, or whose parents are not teaching them habits of industry and honesty, or are persons of notoriously bad character, or are vagrants, or have been convicted of infamous offenses, and colored children, in all cases where they are in danger of moral contamination, may be bound as apprentices by the district judge or one of the magistrates for the aforesaid term.

It provides "that no person of color shall pursue or practice the art, trade, or business of an artisan, mechanic, or shop-keeper, or any other trade, employment, or business (besides that of husbandry, or that of a servant under a contract for service or labor) on his own account and for his own benefit, or in partnership with a white person, or as agent or servant of any person, until he shall have obtained a license therefor from the judge of the district court, which license shall be good for one year only. This license the judge may grant upon petition of the applicant, and upon being satisfied of his skill and fitness and of his good moral character, and upon payment by the applicant to the clerk of the district court of $100, if a shop-keeper or peddler, to be paid annually, and ten dollars if a mechanic, artisan, or to engage in any other trade, also to be paid annually: Provided, however, That upon complaint being made and proved to the district judge of an abuse of such license he shall revoke the same."

FLORIDA.

An act to punish vagrants and vagabonds, January 12, 1866.

Section 1 defines as a vagrant "every able-bodied person who has no visible means of living and shall not be employed at some labor to support himself or herself, or shall be leading an idle, immoral, or profligate course of life;" and may be arrested by any justice of the peace or judge of the county criminal court and be bound "in sufficient surety" for good behavior and future industry for one year. Upon refusing or failing to give such security, he or she may be committed for trial, and, if convicted, sentenced to labor or imprisonment not exceeding twelve months, by whipping not exceeding thirty-nine stripes, or being put in the pillory. If sentenced to labor, the "sheriff or other officer of said court shall hire out such person for the term to which he or she shall be sentenced, not exceeding twelve months aforesaid, and the proceeds of such hiring shall be paid into the county treasury." All vagrants going armed may be disarmed by the sheriff, constable, or police officer.

An act prescribing additional penalties for the commission of offenses against the State, and for other purposes, January 15, 1866.

Section 1 provides that whenever in the criminal laws of this State, heretofore enacted, the punishment of the offense is limited to fine and imprisonment, or to fine or imprisonment, there shall be superadded as an alternative the punishment of standing in the pillory for an hour, or whipping not exceeding thirty-nine stripes on the bare back, or both, at the discretion of the jury.

Section 12 makes it unlawful for any negro, mulatto, or person of color to own, use, or keep in possession or under control any bowie-knife, dirk, sword, fire-arms, or ammunition of any kind, unless by license of the county judge of probate, under a penalty of forfeiting them to the informer and of standing in the pillory one hour, or be whipped not exceeding thirty-nine stripes, or both, at the discretion of the jury.

Section 15 provides that persons forming a military organization not authorized by law, or aiding or abetting it, shall be fined not exceeding $1,000, and imprisonment not exceeding six months, or be pilloried for one hour, and be whipped not exceeding thirty-nine stripes, at the discretion of the jury. The penalties to be threefold upon persons who accepted offices in such organizations.

No. 35.—An ordinance relative to the police of negroes recently emancipated within the parish of Saint Landry.

Whereas it was formerly made the duty of the police jury to make suitable regulations for the police of slaves within the limits of the parish; and whereas slaves have become emancipated by action of the ruling powers; and whereas it is necessary, for public order as well as for the comfort and correct deportment of said freedmen, that suitable regulations should be established for their government in their changed condition, the following ordinances are adopted:

SECTION 1. Be it ordained by the police jury of the parish of Saint Landry, That no negro shall be allowed to pass within the limits of said parish without a special permit in writing from his employer. Whoever shall violate this provision shall pay a fine of $2.50, or in default thereof shall be forced to work four days on the public roads or suffer corporal punishment, as provided hereinafter.

SEC. 2. Be it further ordained, That every negro who shall be found absent from the residence of his employer after ten o'clock at night, without a written permit from his employer, shall pay a fine of five dollars, or in default thereof shall be compelled to work five days on the public road, or suffer corporal punishment, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. Be it further ordained, That no negro shall be permitted to rent or keep a house within said parish. Any negro violating this provision shall be immediately ejected and compelled to find an employer; and any person who shall rent or give the use of any house to any negro in violation of this section shall pay a fine of five dollars for each offense.

SEC. 4 Be it further ordained, That every negro is required to be in the regular service of some white person or former owner. But said employer or former owner may permit said negro to hire his own time by special permission in writing, which permission shall not extend over seven days at any one time. Any negro violating the provisions of this section shall be fined five dollars for each offense, or in default of the payment thereof shall be forced to work five days on the public road, or suffer corporal punishment as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 5. Be it further ordained, That no public meetings or congregations of negroes shall be allowed within said parish after sunset; but such public meetings and congregations may be held between the hours of sunrise and sunset, by the special permission in writing of the captain of patrol within whose beat such meetings shall take place. This prohibition, however, is not intended to prevent negroes from attending the usual church services conducted by white ministers and priests. Every negro violating the provisions of this section shall pay a fine of five dollars, or in default thereof shall be compelled to work five days on the public road, or suffer corporal punishment as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 6. Be it further ordained, That no negro shall be permitted to preach, exhort, or otherwise declaim to congregations of colored people, without a special permission in writing from the president of the police jury. Any negro violating the provisions of this section shall pay a fine of ten dollars, or in default thereof shall be forced to work ten days on the public road, or suffer corporal punishment as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 14. Be it further ordained, That the corporal punishment provided for in the foregoing sections shall consist in confining the body of the offender within a barrel placed over his or her shoulders in the manner practiced in the Army, such confinement not to continue longer than twelve hours, and for such time within the aforesaid limit as shall be fixed by the captain or chief of patrol who inflicts the penalty.

Such, sir, was the general character of the legislation in the South for three or four years after the war. Is it to be wondered at that the negro continues to distrust the men who made these enactments; or can the American people trust to them the liberties and suffrage of the colored people of the South and the guardianship of the principles established in the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments?

Mr. President, before I close my remarks I desire to say one word in relation to the State of Mississippi and what the republican party has done there. And I will say at the outset that Mississippi is proud of her reconstruction and her republican record. She challenges any State North or South to show a more rapid progress in proportion to her advantages, or a government freer from reproach considering her circumstances and surroundings. The democrats left her without a dollar in her treasury, a bankrupt not only in fortune but in character. We have seen how her democratic Legislature of 1865 and 1866 added to her embarrassment and her shame by putting upon the statute-books some of the most infamous laws that have disgraced modern civilization.

When the work of reconstruction commenced, this very same secession democracy counseled the people to have "nothing to do with the unclean thing." When the question of framing a new constitution was pending and an election was ordered by the military government, the democratic leaders said to their friends "Keep away from the polls, have nothing to do with it," and they succeeded in dissuading a large portion of the intelligent people from participating in the work of reconstructing the State. The result was that a convention met in Jackson composed largely of colored men. But let me say that the white republicans did everything in their power to induce the southern men of Mississippi to come forward and give their aid and assistance and the benefit of their counsels in framing the organic law of the State. But no; the democratic press and the leading democrats of the State threatened and intimidated the people, as they are doing now, to act against their better judgment.

What is true in Mississippi was true in almost every Southern State. When the proposition was made for them to accept the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, it was spurned with contempt, as they have spurned and resisted every single step in the progress of reconstruction, under the lead of the same rash, fiery, intractable men who would now overthrow the results that have been wrought out and who are determined to do so peaceably if they can—forcibly if they must.

Notwithstanding these adverse circumstances, notwithstanding the opposition of the democracy, we succeeded in framing a constitution that we are indeed proud of. It will compare favorably with the organic law of any State in any country, and there is one feature particularly to which I will allude. In the constitutional convention a proposition was offered by a republican, an adventurer, as they are called by way of opprobrium, that the credit of the State should never be loaned to any corporation, and that was opposed by the democratic members of that convention. In 1869 under the resubmission act of Congress, when the question came up as to whether we would retain that clause in our constitution, the leading democratic paper in that State, the paper that to-day is howling about the plundering and robbery and the terrible condition of the South brought about by misrule under republicans, advocated voting that clause of the constitution out. But the loyal, patriotic republicans of Mississippi voted in its favor, and to-day as a consequence our debt is only nominal, is a mere bagatelle.

After we had framed and adopted our constitution we continued the work of reconstructing our State. We found its treasury empty, not a dollar in it. The democracy had robbed the State of all its trust fund. We commenced the work of repairing our public buildings. We found the capitol ready to fall to the ground; we found our asylums for the blind, the deaf and dumb, and for the insane, in ruins; we have repaired and rebuilt these public buildings; we have established a school system equal to that of any State in this Union, and to-day in Mississippi under republican rule one hundred thousand children are drinking from the fountains of knowledge; we have built up our jails and our court-houses; we have rebuilt the bridges that were burned during the devastation of war. We have accomplished all these things under republican rule, and to-day the State is not in debt to exceed a million dollars, and she owes most of her debt to her own trust fund. We can pay every dollar we owe, and will in less than two years. We have swept out the abominable "black code" that disgraced the statute-books of Mississippi; we have substituted an equitable system of taxation in the place of the unjust and oppressive revenue laws formerly in existence; we have constituted good courts and filled them with good judges; we have established universities and normal schools for both white and black citizens. Our government has been enlightened and progressive. No distinction has ever been made between citizens and no spirit of intolerance or proscription has ever prevailed against any class of men. One of the first things we did was to remove all restriction upon the right of suffrage and to instruct our Senators and Representatives to favor universal amnesty in the national Legislature. Up to the time of the Vicksburgh election last summer universal peace and good-will reigned throughout the State. That it does not now is due entirely to the democratic White League.

The expenditures of our State government are less by a number of thousands of dollars this year than they ever have been any year since the war, and the present feeling and tendency of the republican party is in favor of the utmost economy in our State. And I may say that I believe this is true of every republican State South. What is the present political status of Louisiana and South Carolina in this respect? Is it not a fact that they are improving and reforming? Is it not true that the State of South Carolina is better governed to-day, that there is more economy, that they are on the road to reform? And what is true of South Carolina is especially true of Louisiana. Under Governor Kellogg's administration they have reduced and limited the indebtedness of the State, and lessened taxation almost one-third. There has been a system of economy and reform inaugurated; and yet the democracy have the audacity to say that the tendency of things South under republican administration is destruction and the people are therefore justified in these revolutions. You would think, to hear them talk, that there had never been anything but virtue in the South until the advent of the "carpet-baggers;" but that since the establishment of republican rule, virtue, patriotism, and honesty are unknown. We have had bad men, Mr. President, I do not deny it, but most of them have been driven out from our ranks and are in the democratic party to-day.

One word, Mr. President, if the Senate will bear with me, on this question of "carpet-baggers." Sir, we are a nation of "carpet-baggers." "Carpet-baggers" landed upon Plymouth Rock in 1620; "carpet-baggers" founded the first colony on the James; and "carpet-baggers" have pioneered and settled every State and Territory of this Union. Wherever civilization makes an advance it is the carpet-bagger that makes it. Why, sir, out of twenty governors of Mississippi prior to the war only one was a native of the State, and out of fifty-nine members of Congress and Senators who represented Mississippi in this Capitol before the war only three or four were "to the manner born." I doubt not this is true of all our Western States. It is the feature of our civilization. Here is a list of carpet-baggers in the present Congress:

Why, sir, how did you expect to carry out your reconstruction except by the "carpet-bagger?" You adopted the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, and put on paper some very wise legislation in regard to the rights of American citizens. But, sir, legislation don't carry itself into effect. It was the "carpet-bagger" that carried out your legislation, and at the risk of his life put the ballot practically in the hands of those to whom you had given it as a right. Without the "carpet-bagger" your amendments and your legislation would have been a dead letter, and unless he is sustained the work already accomplished will come to naught.

Mr. President, I have endeavored in my humble way to show to the Senate in the first place that this great clamor that has been raised in this country over Louisiana was perfectly groundless. I have endeavored to show that the President of the United States, in his action in Louisiana, has done nothing more and nothing less than he was required to do under his oath, to uphold and sustain the Constitution.

I have shown that the military officers in command of the Army in the State of Louisiana have simply obeyed the law. I have shown that all this outcry about "military usurpation" and the "terrible blow struck at liberty" in the removal of five men from the legislative hall in New Orleans is groundless and for a purpose. I have endeavored to show that so far from a legislature being invaded, it was nothing but a mob; and that the five men who were ejected from the hall had no right to be there participating in its organization. I have endeavored to show that there was such a condition of things in Louisiana that the governor of that State was authorized and required to do what he did; and had he done anything less he would have been derelict of his duty. When he had the evidence that the law was being trampled under foot, that a mob had entered the very legislative halls, he called upon the posse comitatus to preserve the peace and protect the majority of that Legislature from mob violence. I say he called the posse comitatus, and I have endeavored to show that in calling upon the military he was justified under the laws of the country; that it is a well-established principle of common law both in England and this country that the posse includes all citizens, not excepting persons in the military service.

I cited to sustain this position the opinion of a most distinguished lawyer, the Hon. Caleb Cushing, to the effect, that a conservator of the peace has a right to call upon the military of any denomination or character as a posse comitatus; and therefore, the chief conservator of the peace in Louisiana was justified in calling upon General De Trobriand and his troops to assist him to preserve the peace.

I have endeavored further to show that this hue and cry about the condition of affairs in the South, the plundering of the people by "adventurers" and "strangers," is for the most part gotten up for political effect, and is not founded on facts. I have endeavored to show that outrages, murders, and assassinations have been prevalent in the South, and that organizations of men, led on by a vile "banditti" for the purpose of overthrowing the southern governments, exist there; and the fallacy and absurdity of the attempt made by the opposition to make it appear that these statements are only for partisan effect.

In closing, I desire to say to my democratic friends, I desire to say to the distinguished Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] that instead of palliating he ought to denounce these things. I have great confidence in his patriotism; I admire his ability as a statesman; and I do not believe that if he understood the facts as I understand them, if he knew the real condition of affairs in the South, he would hesitate to give them his censure. I call upon him to investigate this matter and carefully weigh the facts that have been presented, and I say to him that if he as the leader of his party in the Senate would stand in his place and denounce these outrages and say to these miserable murderers at the South, "Stop your murder, stop your assassination, and if there is not force and power enough in your State governments to punish you, we will see that the strong arm of the National Government will reach to you;" if the Senator will make that announcement, and it shall be known that that is the policy of his party, we shall hear no more cries about outrages in the South. Every base Ku-Klux and white-leaguer will disappear; we will have peace and quiet in that country. But so long as these murderers and their inhuman and diabolical crimes find a kind of apology in the very Halls of the national Capitol, so long we shall suffer violence and outrage and revolution, and in the end, in my humble judgment, if continued it will result in the overthrow of our republican institutions.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator desire to proceed to-night, or will he yield now?

Mr. THURMAN. I will yield in a moment, as I should prefer to go on to-morrow; but I wish now to notice one thing that was last said by the Senator who has just spoken. He attributes to me an influence that I really do not suppose myself to possess; in fact it is quite true that I do not possess it if his narration of the condition of society in the South is correct. He says that if I raise my voice here and denounce the Ku-Klux outrages of which he speaks, they will cease. I have but little encouragement to hope that my voice is so potential, for it so happens that on the 18th day of January, 1871, I said to the Senate:

> Mr. President, I have never uttered one word in defense of Ku-Klux organizations. The Senate will bear me witness that no one spoke more strongly against them than I did at the last session. If I were looking at the subject simply in a partisan point of view, I am not so stupid as not to know that every outbreak of that kind only injures the party to which I belong, only furnishes the material for our opponents to excite the passions of the people and to excite the passions of Congress. I know it full well; and if my voice could reach every man who violates the law in the South, and could have potential influence with him, it would be addressed to him in three simple words, "Obey the laws." Such are my feelings; such are my natural instincts; and such is my interest and the interest of the party to which I belong. There is nothing to be gained by us by outrages, which only furnish our adversaries with pretexts for passing acts of legislation that but a few years ago would have shocked every sense of liberty, of freedom, and of constitutional law that had an abiding place in the American heart.—Congressional Globe, part 1, third session Forty-first Congress, 1870—'71, page 578.

That is what I said four years ago, and for which the then Senator from Alabama [Mr. Warner] expressed on the floor of the Senate his thanks, characterizing my words as "brave and useful words" for which he honored me. Sir, if my declarations, or if similar declarations by other democratic Senators on this floor could have the effect which the Senator from Mississippi attributes to them, there would be no such state of society as he has depicted. If there are outrages there, if there is a state of society there that is to be deplored, it is not the fault of the democratic party on this floor or in the other House. But I must be permitted to say that the picture of southern society is not to be drawn by clipping from newspaper after newspaper ad nauseam accounts of murders, violence, and deeds of wrong. I say that there might be a picture of northern society constructed in that way, by clipping from the daily press accounts of crimes in the North, which would make every man living north of the Potomac shudder and blush for his country if that picture were true. That is not the way in which history is to be written; these are not the materials out of which a picture of society is to be made; and it is the poorest service any man can do his country to thus be the compiler and the herald of all those acts that find recital on hearsay in the daily press of the land. Sir, it will not do. This Senate, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which we print, is not to be made the great police gazette of the nation, and the whole American people held up to the civilized world as a set of murderers and assassins because the law is violated sometimes at the North, sometimes at the South, sometimes at the East, sometimes at the West. That will not do, sir. Nor can the great theme which now engages the American Senate, that great question of constitutional law, whether constitutional government shall be preserved in this land or military despotism take its place, be obscured by all the clippings from newspapers that industry can possibly collect.

But, sir, I have said more than I wished to say to-night, and now I will yield to any one who wishes to move either to go into executive session or to adjourn, retaining my right to the floor to-morrow.

Mr. SARGENT. I rose to move that the Senate adjourn; but the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. ALCORN] informs me that he desires to offer a resolution.

OFFICERS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. ALCORN. I offer the following resolution:

> Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to submit to the Senate the report of Clinton Rice, esq., who was commissioned by him under letter of authority dated February 24, 1874, to proceed to the State of Mississippi and investigate certain charges preferred against Mr. Felix Brannigan, United States attorney for the southern district of that State, and also against Mr. Leroy S. Brown, United States marshal for the same district; and that the said Attorney-General be requested to submit also a copy of all correspondence touching said investigation and report with his opinion thereon.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to have that lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. SARGENT. On the suggestion of several Senators I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before putting that question, the Chair will lay before the Senate certain bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 3880) amendatory of the act of June 22, 1874, relating to bankruptcy;

A bill (H. R. No. 1342) declaratory of the rights of such Mexican citizens as were established in territories acquired from Mexico by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Gadsden treaty, and who have since continued to reside within the limits of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4530) further supplemental to the various acts prescribing the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested elections.

The bill (H. R. No. 4528) amendatory of the act approved March 3, 1873, entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce

The bill (H. R. No. 4531) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 26, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. O. H. TIFFANY, of the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal church of Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAYNARD. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being called for, the morning hour commences at thirteen minutes past twelve o'clock, and reports are in order from the select committee to inquire into the condition of affairs in the State of Arkansas.

No report being made from that committee, the Speaker proceeded with the call until the Committee on Elections was reached.

Mr. TODD rose.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I ask liberty for my colleague on the Committee on Elections from Tennessee [Mr. HARRISON] to make a report when he comes into the House.

The SPEAKER. The House meets at twelve o'clock, and the Chair does not think that any further privilege should be asked for members of committees, as much of the time of the committees has been dispensed with during this session by motions to suspend the rules and special orders. The House meets daily at twelve o'clock and the first business in order after the reading of the Journal is the call of committees for reports.

TESTIMONY IN CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. TODD, from the Committee on Elections, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4530) further supplemental to the various acts prescribing the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested election; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that so much of section 127 of the Revised Statutes as requires the Clerk of the House of Representatives to open, upon the written request of either party, any deposition in a case of contested election, after he shall have received the same, and prior to the meeting of Congress, be repealed.

Mr. TODD. I will state to the House that this bill proposes simply to repeal the last sentence of the fourth section of an act approved on the 10th of January, 1873, which is now the one hundred and twenty-seventh section of the revised code. The law as it now stands allows either party in a contested-election case to have a package of testimony opened in the absence of the opposite party and without notice to the other side. This practice has led during the present session to charges of improper tampering with the evidence. The law on this subject as it originally passed the House did not contain this sentence. It was attached to it in the Senate without due reflection and forecasting of the evil that might result from it.

The practice heretofore had been that when testimony was received by the Clerk it should be retained unopen and unbroken and handed over to the Committee on Elections. We think it better that the old practice should be restored, and that the Clerk should be relieved from the responsibility of allowing a package of testimony to be opened at the request of one party in the absence of the other, and that the parties themselves should not be subjected to charges of improper conduct in tampering with testimony opened in the absence of the opposing party. No harm can result from the repeal of this provision of the law, because both parties have abundant opportunity to have copies of all the testimony at the time it is taken, and after it is submitted to the Committee on Elections, and therefore the committee was unanimously of the opinion that this bill should pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TODD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Elections, submitted a report in writing upon a joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) proposing an amendment to the Constitution in respect of the election of President and Vice-President.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. For the purpose of obviating the danger and difficulty of a large accumulation of contested-election cases in the electoral districts proposed, and to prevent the gerrymandering of States by partisan majorities in the construction of election districts, and to dispense with the cumbersome machinery of electoral districts, while preserving the autonomy of the States in the election of President and Vice-President, I ask permission to report a substitute for the joint resolution recommended by the majority of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the reports be printed and laid upon the table.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I ask that the joint resolution in each case be printed in the RECORD.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. I have also a resolution which I am instructed to report by the Committee on Elections, providing for printing of five thousand extra copies of the report upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. That resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing under the law.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. The Committee on Elections, by special order, have liberty to report this joint resolution at any time. If these reports are laid upon the table, will it be in order for the committee to call up this subject at any time?

The SPEAKER. They had better be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Then I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the reports were ordered to be printed and recommitted.

The joint resolution reported by the majority of the committee is as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment of the Constitution in respect of the election of President and Vice-President.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the Constitution to wit:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The President and Vice-President shall be elected by the direct vote of the people in the manner following: Each State shall be divided into districts, equal in number to the number of Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress, to be composed of contiguous territory, and to be as nearly equal in population as may be; and the person having the highest number of votes in each district for President shall receive the vote of that district, which shall count one presidential vote: but no voter in any State shall vote for candidates for President and Vice-President who are both citizens in the same State with himself.

SEC. 2. The person having the highest number of votes for President in a State shall receive two presidential votes from the State at large.

SEC. 3. The person having the highest number of presidential votes in the United States shall be President.

SEC. 4. If two persons have the same number of votes in any State, it being the highest number, they shall receive each one presidential vote from the State at large; and if more than two persons shall have each the same number of votes in any State, it being the highest number, no presidential vote shall be counted from the State at large. If more persons than one shall have the same number of votes, it being the highest number in any district, no presidential vote shall be counted from that district.

SEC. 5. The foregoing provisions shall apply to the election of Vice-President.

SEC. 6. The Congress shall have power to provide for holding and conducting the elections of President and Vice-President. The returns of such elections shall be made to the Supreme Court of the United States within thirty days after the election. Said court shall, under such rules as may be prescribed by law, or by the court in the absence of law, determine any contest in respect of such returns, canvass the same, and declare, within ninety days after such election, by public proclamation, who is elected President and who is elected Vice-President.

SEC. 7. The States shall be divided into districts by the Legislatures thereof, but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter the same.

SEC. 8. No person who has been a justice of the Supreme Court shall be eligible to the office of President or Vice-President.

The substitute reported by Mr. SMITH, of New York, is as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment of the Constitution in respect of the election of President and Vice-President.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the Constitution, to wit:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The President and Vice-President shall be elected by the direct vote of the people in the manner following, but no voter in any State shall vote for candidates for President and Vice-President who are both citizens in the same State with himself:

SEC. 2. In counting the votes the aggregate popular vote in each State for President and Vice-President shall be respectively divided by the number of Representatives apportioned to such State in the House of Representatives, and twice the result or quotient shall be added to the vote of the candidate having the highest number of the popular vote in such State for President, as and for the State vote for such candidate. The person having the highest number of votes in all the States, including the popular vote and the State vote, shall be President, and the person having the highest number of votes in all the States, including the popular vote and the State vote for Vice-President, shall be Vice-President.

SEC. 3. The Congress shall have power to provide for holding and conducting the elections of President and Vice-President. The returns of such elections shall be made to the Supreme Court of the United States within thirty days after the election. Said court shall, under such rules as may be prescribed by law, or by the court in the absence of law, determine any contest in respect of such returns, canvass the same, and declare, within ninety days after such election, by public proclamation, who is elected President and who is elected Vice-President.

SEC. 4. No person who has been a justice of the Supreme Court shall be eligible to the office of President or Vice-President.

WHEELER'S EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No 4531) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1873; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the act referred to in the title shall be amended by adding to the clause relating to the engraving and printing of the plates illustrating the report of the geographical and geological explorations and surveys west of the one hundredth meridian the words, "and that two thousand copies shall be printed by the Congressional Printer," after substituting the word "dollars" in lieu of the concluding word of said clause.

Mr. GARFIELD. The clause of the act referred to appropriates $25,000 for publishing the report of Lieutenant Wheeler's expedition. After the bill had passed both Houses, by some blunder in enrollment it went to the State Department with the clause reading "twenty-five thousand thousand;" the word "dollars" being left out and the word "thousand" substituted in its place. Of course nothing can be drawn from the Treasury for this purpose unless the correction is made. The committee report this bill in order to correct that error of enrollment. The only other change which is made is to name the number of copies of the report to be printed, the number not being named in the original bill.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the estimated cost of these two thousand copies, taken in conjunction with the preparation of the engraved plates? I want to get at the aggregate cost of the publication of this work, so that we may be able to see how much these books cost the Government, books which in very many instances, by reason of the want of proper facilities to get through the mails—that is, free transmission—are treated as old lumber and waste paper.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I desire to say that we have had under consideration in our committee this morning this work of Lieutenant Wheeler. It is a geographical survey, and of great importance to the country.

Mr. RANDALL. I quite agree with the gentleman that these reports are most valuable. But still, while we are considering this subject it is proper that we should ascertain what they cost.

Mr. GARFIELD. I submit a letter with an accompanying estimate from the Congressional Printer, which will show the estimated cost of this work.

The letter and estimate are as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CONGRESSIONAL PRINTER,
Washington, January 14, 1875.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your note of January 7, I have the honor to transmit herewith an estimate for printing and binding an edition of two thousand copies (six volumes, quarto) of Lieutenant Wheeler's expedition. I have not included the wood-cuts, for the reason that, until I am correctly informed of the number, size, and character of the wood-cuts required, that I may obtain estimates from the engravers of their cost, it is not possible for me to include that item of expense.

I am, very respectfully,

A. M. CLAPP,
Congressional Printer.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. How many of Hayden's Reports are printed?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. It seems to me that there should be as many of this report as of Hayden's. They are sent out for the same purpose, and the information which they furnish ought to be equally attainable by the people.

Mr. GARFIELD. This bill is merely to correct an error of enrollment in the law of last year, not for new legislation.

Mr. HOLMAN. How are these two thousand copies to be distributed?

Mr. GARFIELD. They will be placed under the control of the Secretary of War, unless Congress shall direct otherwise. Does the gentleman desire any other distribution of them?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the same mode of distribution should be adopted in regard to this report as was adopted in regard to the other in order to get them over the entire country.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the gentleman want to move an amendment to have them distributed by Congress?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think they should be distributed by Congress in the usual proportion between the House and the Senate.

Mr. GARFIELD. One-half of the entire number to the two Houses in the usual proportion.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not enough for Congress; let the Department have three hundred copies, and Congress the rest.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will move to amend so that five hundred copies shall be for the Department and the remainder, fifteen hundred copies, for distribution by Congress in the usual proportion between the two Houses. I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE 3.65 DISTRICT BONDS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 4463) for the payment of interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia. The amendment of the committee strikes out the words "in coin" after the words "$182,500."

The bill, as amended by the committee, was read. It provides that $182,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated for the payment of the interest on the bonds of the District of Columbia known as the 3.65 bonds, due February 1, 1875, issued under the act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, said interest to be paid by the Treasurer of the United States or the assistant treasurer in New York, on surrender of the proper coupons; provided that the sum hereby appropriated shall be considered and adjusted as a part of the proper proportional sum to be paid by the United States for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, and of the interest on its funded debt.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any report accompanying this bill?

Mr. GARFIELD. I send to the desk to be read a communication from the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to reserve a point of order on this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the report be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. It should be understood that the point of order on this bill is not waived.

The SPEAKER. The point of order will be reserved till the communication has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
January 11, 1875.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

The commissioners of the District respectfully request that the attention of Congress may be called to the necessity of legislative provision for the payment of the interest on the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes." These bonds are generally known as "3.65 bonds." The act of Congress above cited pledges the faith of the United States to the payment (by proper proportional appropriation and by taxation on property within the District) of the interest on said bonds as well as to the creation of a sinking fund for payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

The same act of Congress contemplates the ascertainment, through future legislation, of the proper proportion of the expense of the government of the District of Columbia, including interest on its funded debt, which should be borne by the District and by the United States respectively. This proportion has not yet been determined by the requisite legislation. Upon the funded debt of the District of Columbia, other than the 3.65 bonds, the interest, including that due January 1, 1875, has been paid, or is in process of payment, out of the revenues from taxes on property in the District.

At its last session Congress authorized an advance from the United States Treasury for the payment of interest on the funded debt of said District, due July 1, 1874, (the 3.65 bonds not then having been issued,) but it was required that the sum thus advanced should be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States from the treasury of the District, and this reimbursement has been made in full. The 3.65 bonds result in principal part from the funding of floating indebtedness of the late board of public works, which was created by an act of Congress, and whose operations were subject to congressional control, and to some extent were independent of interposition on the part of the municipal government of the District.

After payment from the treasury of the District of the current expense of the municipal government, and of the interest on the funded debt of the District other than the 3.65 bonds, taxes on private property will not afford sufficent revenue to pay any part of the interest on the 3.65 bonds which falls due on February 1, 1875. It results, therefore, that either congressional appropriation for this interest must be made, or that there must be default in the payment of interest to which the faith of the United States is pledged. If the requisite sum be appropriated by Congress, it is advisable that the interest should be paid in the Treasury of the United States and the coupons canceled there. According to law, these bonds are registered in the office of the Register of the United States Treasury. It might also be provided that such sum as may be appropriated for this purpose shall be considered and adjusted hereafter as a part of the proper proportional sum to be paid by the United States toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia and of the interest on its funded debt.

The commissioners are advised by the board of audit that, in the opinion of that board, "provision should be made for the February interest on $10,000,000 of the 3.65 bonds." The facts upon which this opinion is based are stated in a communication from the board of audit, hereto annexed.

For the semi-annual interest on $10,000,000 of these bonds there would be required $182,500.

The commissioners of the District therefore recommend the appropriation by Congress of $182,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the payment of interest on such bonds, due on February 1, 1875, the interest to be paid on surrender of the coupons to the Treasurer of the United States; and the sum thus paid to be considered and adjusted as a part of the proper proportional sum to be paid by the United States toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, and toward the payment of the interest on the funded debt of the District.

We venture to call the attention of Congress to the suggestion in our report of the 5th ultimo, for the payment of the interest on the 3.65 bonds in gold, and to the report of the commissioners of the sinking fund, which accompanied our report, on the same subject.

Respectfully, &c.,

WM. DENNISON,
J. H. KETCHAM,
Commissioners District of Columbia.

OFFICE BOARD OF AUDIT,
COLUMBIA BUILDING, FOUR-AND-A-HALF STREET,
Washington, January 8, 1875.

GENTLEMEN: In answer to your letter of this date, we have to say that, in our opinion, provision should be made for the February interest on $10,000,000 of the 3.65 bonds.

Our report of December 7 showed the issue of auditor's certificates to the amount of $6,858,727.18, and claims pending $3,147,787.48. Total, $10,006,514.66.

Other claims have been presented and allowed, and, although the amount of $10,000,000 has not yet been certified, when certified the owners of those based on old claims will be entitled to interest.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

R. W. TAYLER,
First Comptroller.
J. M. BRODHEAD,
Second Comptroller, Board of Audit.

Hon. COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. GARFIELD. If gentlemen will allow me, I desire to say simply this: The commissioners of the District have no power to distrain for taxes until March. They cannot sell property for taxes.

Mr. FORT. I submit whether the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can go on and discuss this bill and thus cut out the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know whether the point of order is insisted on.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. HOLMAN. It is.

The SPEAKER. Then the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. DURHAM, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 4322) amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. BROMBERG. Mr. Speaker, how does this bill come before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is reported on the regular call by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the seventh section of the act entitled "An act amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, as authorizes the selection and appointment of three commissioners to wind up the affairs of said institution be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to appoint one commissioner, who shall execute a bond to the United States, with good sureties, in the penal sum of $100,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties as commissioner aforesaid, and take an oath to faithfully perform his duties as such, which bond shall be executed in the presence of said Secretary and approved by him and by him safely kept; and when said bond shall have been executed, and oath taken, then said commissioner shall be invested with the legal title to all the property of said company for the purposes of this act, and the said act of June 20, 1874, and shall have all the rights, prerogatives, and privileges, and perform all the duties, that were conferred and enjoined upon the three commissioners mentioned in said act of June 20, 1874.

SEC. 3. That said commissioner shall have the right and authority to compound and compromise debts due to and liabilities of the company, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 4. That said commissioner shall have the right and authority to sell any of the property of said company at public or private sale, as in his judgment he may deem best, and to buy in for the benefit of the company any property which may be offered for sale to pay debts and liabilities to said company, if in his judgment said property is being sacrificed by said sale. He shall make to the purchasers of property sold by him deeds of conveyance to their respective purchases.

SEC. 5. That said commissioner shall not engage in any other business pursuits while winding up the affairs of said company, and shall, by the tenth day of each session of Congress, make a written report to Congress of his actings and doings up to the first day of said session; and for his services as commissioner aforesaid he shall receive an annual salary of $5,000, to be paid out of the funds of said institution.

SEC. 6. That whenever said commissioner is prepared to make a dividend to the depositors, he is authorized and directed, through the United States Treasurer, to place in the various depository banks of the United States which are convenient to said depositors an amount sufficient to pay them; and the officers of said banks shall pay the depositors, or their assignees, and take receipts from them in such way and manner as shall be prescribed by said commissioner and the Secretary of the Treasury; and said evidences of payment shall be returned by said officers to the commissioner, and by him preserved: Provided, That where there are no depository banks of the United States, then said commissioner may, with the advice and consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, pay the depositors in said localities in such way as he may deem best.

SEC. 7. That said commissioner may prescribe such form as he may deem right and proper for the depositors to transfer their claims, provided every such transfer shall state the amount of his claim transferred and the amount he receives for the same.

SEC. 8. That said commissioner shall make payments to those depositors only whose pass-books have been properly verified and balanced, unless said pass-books have been lost or destroyed; then, upon satisfactory proof of said loss or destruction, and the amount due them, he may pay as though they had pass-books.

SEC. 9. That said commissioner is hereby authorized and directed, by consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, to employ some suitable and proper attorney at law to look into and investigate the manner in which said company has been managed by its trustees and others having control of the same; and if, in the judgment of said attorney, the affairs of said company have been mismanaged or managed fraudulently and corruptly, then, with the advice of the Secretary of the Treasury, he shall cause such civil and criminal proceedings to be instituted in the courts against those participating in said mismanagement or fraudulent and corrupt management as he deems right and proper to attain the ends of justice. He shall pay fees and costs of suits out of the funds in his hands as commissioner aforesaid.

SEC. 10. That if from any cause there shall be any considerable delay in making a dividend to the depositors, then said commissioner may, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, invest the funds on hand in United States bonds, until such time as he may be prepared to make a dividend, as directed under the act of June 20, 1874.

Mr. DURHAM. I ask now that the amendments reported by the committee be read.

Mr. FORT. I desire to raise a point of order on this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the bill is subject to a point of order.

Mr. FORT. The second section of the bill provides for the creation of a new office.

Mr. DURHAM. The gentleman's point of order cannot stand upon this bill, because the fees of this officer are to be paid out of the funds of the institution.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not see how any point of order can lie upon a bill which has no connection with the public Treasury.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The bill creates a new office.

Mr. MAYNARD. But the officer is not to be paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He will have to be.

Mr. MAYNARD. No, sir.

Mr. FORT. He must be in the first instance.

Mr. MAYNARD. No, sir; there is no such provision.

Mr. DAWES. What authority have we to take money out of the funds of the institution to pay the salary of a new office that we create?

Mr. MAYNARD. We have such right in pursuance of the authority reserved in the creation of the corporation to change, regulate, or modify the law governing the corporation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] will please state specifically his point of order.

Mr. FORT. I see that in the second section of the bill it is provided that the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint a commissioner; and I suppose it will necessarily follow as a matter of law that this commissioner must be paid; and in the first instance he will have to be paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. HUBBELL. He is to be paid out of the funds of the bank.

Mr. FORT. If it is claimed that he is to be paid out of the funds of the bank, then of course, if those funds are not sufficient——

Mr. MAYNARD. Then he will get no pay.

Mr. FORT. If the funds in the bank are not sufficient to pay him, the Government will not be reimbursed.

The SPEAKER. That is a very remote consideration on which to rest a point of order. The gentleman will observe that the point of order, if good, must lie against a specific provision to take money out of the Treasury of the United States. This bill contains no provision for taking one dollar out of the Treasury.

Mr. DURHAM. I wish it to be understood that I do not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. Of course the discussion of a point of order does not take the gentleman off the floor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I was about to make a point of order when my friend from Illinois [Mr. FORT] rose.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to suggest that the original act creating this corporation reserved to Congress full and complete power at any time to alter, regulate, or modify the law governing the corporation.

Mr. BROMBERG. Will the gentleman put his finger on any such provision in the law?

Mr. MAYNARD. This bill is simply a measure proposed to be passed in conformity with that reserved power.

Mr. BROMBERG. The gentleman has not stated correctly the law.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. My point of order is that this bill provides for an officer to be appointed under the law of the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. You must pay—the United States has no right to appropriate anybody else's funds to pay.

Mr. BROMBERG. I wish to correct a statement of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts knows officers are often designated to do certain things without pay—without any whatever. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts maintain if the bill is passed in its present form the Secretary of the Treasury would be authorized to pay the man?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The man would have a right to go to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Precisely; he would have the right to go to the Court of Claims, but that does not constitute a point of order that money is appropriated here.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But it takes the money of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will observe the point of order does not lie against this bill, because there is nothing in it which takes one dollar of money out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He has the right to go to the Court of Claims to get it.

The SPEAKER. He cannot go into the Court of Claims unless Congress authorizes him to do so. The point of order does not lie against the bill.

Mr. BROMBERG. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DURHAM. I do not yield.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has a point of order the Chair will hear it.

Mr. BROMBERG. The gentleman from Tennessee has made a statement, and I wish to ask him what section of the charter authorizes Congress to amend it. I have looked at the charter and cannot find it.

Mr. MAYNARD. You will find it on page 88.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary point. That Congress transcends its power is not a parliamentary point.

Mr. BROMBERG. I ask for a moment's time so we may understand exactly about this matter. The gentleman from Tennessee made the statement, and I wish to know what foundation he has for it.

Mr. DURHAM. The gentleman will have full opportunity to understand the whole matter. I ask that the amendments reported from the committee be now read.

The Clerk read the amendments, as follows:

In section 4, line 1, after the word "commissioner" insert these words, "with the advice and consent of the Secretary;" so it will read:

SEC. 4. That said commissioner, with the advice and consent of the Secretary, shall have the right and authority to sell any of the property of said company, at public or private sale, as in his judgment he may deem best, and to buy in, for the benefit of the company, any property which may be offered for sale to pay debts and liabilities to said company, if in his judgment said property is being sacrificed by said sale. He shall make to the purchasers of property sold by him deeds of conveyance to their respective purchases.

In section 7, line 1, after the word "commissioner" insert the words "and the Secretary;" so it will read:

SEC. 7. That said commissioner and the Secretary may prescribe such form as he may deem right and proper for the depositors to transfer their claims, provided every such transfer shall state the amount of his claim transferred, and the amount he receives for the same.

At the end of section 9 add the following:

Provided, the aggregate paid to attorneys shall not exceed the sum of $5,000 per annum.

Add the following new section:

SEC. 11. When the commissioner shall have executed the bond and taken the oath as prescribed in section 2 hereof, then the present commissioners shall turn over and transfer to the new commissioner all the assets and securities of every kind now in their hands as commissioners aforesaid, and when said transfer shall have been made, then the present commissioners shall be released from all future liability on their present bond.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendments will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The pending question now is, Shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed and read a third time?

Mr. FORT. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to yield to me to move an amendment.

Mr. DURHAM. Wait a moment. I know there was some difference of opinion in the committee in regard to one section of the bill, and I have been asked by quite a number of gentlemen to allow them to submit amendments to it. This matter is of sufficiently grave importance to be fully understood and discussed before the whole country, and consequently as much time as can be given to its discussion by the House I have no objection to, nor to listen to any amendments which may be suggested by the friends or opponents of the bill. I am instructed by the committee to take this course, and if gentlemen have amendments they desire to offer, I have no objection to their coming in to be voted on.

It will state further, Mr. Speaker, that there is a great deal of opposition to putting the power of winding up this concern into the hands of one man, although he may be under the supervision and control of the Secretary of the Treasury. The object of the committee in coming to that conclusion was that this institution, which has been so miserably managed, shall be saved all unnecessary future expense, and therefore we have reported in favor of one commissioner at a salary of $5,000, rather than three commissioners with salaries aggregating $9,000. Therefore it is I have reported the bill in its present form.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me at that point?

Mr. DURHAM. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I see a very grave objection in the provision of the bill by which an individual is to be charged with this trust, representing the interests of seventy-two thousand cestui que trusts in eleven States of this Union. They are chiefly colored men—almost exclusively so. The business is now in the hands of three men of integrity and character, I believe all of them; one of them being Robert Purvis, who is recognized by the colored people of this country as their representative man on all occasions in which he appears. The idea of effecting a saving——

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, I thought I was yielding to the gentleman to make an inquiry. I do not yield to him for an argument until the proper time comes. If he has a question to propound to me, I will answer it; but I have the floor now.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman said he would allow discussion or an amendment. As my remarks will not apply to any amendment——

Mr. DURHAM. I do not want to be taken off my feet.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not mean to take the gentleman off his feet.

Mr. DURHAM. I will yield to the gentleman for an inquiry or to offer an amendment

Mr. KELLEY. I do not propose to offer an amendment or make an inquiry. I have simply a suggestion—that the saving of $4,000 would be a small economy if your one trustee in bonds for $100,000 to administrate an estate of millions should become a defaulter.

Mr. DURHAM. I ask the Chair how much time can be allowed for a discussion of this question? I am willing to allow for its discussion all the time the House will give to it.

Mr. RANDALL. I am one of the respectable minority of the committee on this bill, and would like to have a little time to speak on it.

Mr. DURHAM. Gentlemen shall have the time they want if the House will say how much time it is willing to devote to the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have five or ten minutes.

Mr. FORT. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add these words:

The United States shall not be liable to pay any expense under the provisions of this act or by reason of closing up the affairs of the said bank.

Mr. RAINEY. I desire to ask what authority the United States have to appropriate other people's money for the purpose of closing up this bank, unless they propose to assume the responsibility of the indebtedness of the bank as an entirety?

Mr. DURHAM. I should like the House to indicate what time will be allowed for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Unless some arrangement is made, the bill will hold its position in the morning hour until it is disposed of.

Mr. DURHAM. I yield five minutes to my friend on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL. I do not see that the object of this bill is to change any existing law in regard to the management of this bank. The real controversy is whether there shall be three commissioners at $3,000 each, or whether there shall be but one at $5,000. Now, the parties who are most interested in this matter are the colored people of the various States in which this institution and its branches are located; and so far as I am able to learn, the colored population are unanimously adverse to a change in this respect. In other words, to meet the question fairly, they desire that persons of their own color shall be represented in the board of commissioners.

Now, the fact of the matter is that these colored people have been dealt with very outrageously, and the white people connected with this institution, so far as I have been able to learn, have only been engaged in lending the colored people's money to white people who have abused the confidence placed in them, and for once I am entirely free to say that I think the demand made by the colored people in respect to this bill is a reasonable one and should be granted to them.

Now, sir, as regards the character of the men employed as commissioners. I have but little experience as to their conduct, but of one of them I can speak with great certainty, because I have known him all my life nearly, and a purer man and more upright man, white or black, than that colored man does not live. I speak of Robert Purvis. He stands among the business men of Philadelphia as high as any man in that community; and for one I should violate the judgment of my constituents in respect to that man if I gave any vote here which in the slightest degree cast a reproach on him directly or indirectly.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The hour of one o'clock having arrived, I call the regular order.

Mr. MERRIAM. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he would propose to make Purvis one of the commissioners in this bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I would, sir. I am not hostile to many of the features of this bill; but I am entirely opposed to taking the control from the hands of the people who ought to have it, to wit, the colored people of the South.

Mr. MERRIAM. So am I.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is the white men who have cheated, and not the colored men.

Mr. RANDALL. That is what I have said. The white men have done nothing but take the money out of the banks and keep it. These are the reasons why I shall advocate and vote for an amendment not to reduce the number of commissioners. The rest of the bill, if that amendment is adopted, I approve of and will cordially vote for.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. At the hour of one o'clock this day, by a suspension of the rules or by unanimous consent, the Committee on the Judiciary is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DURHAM. Does this bill go over until to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It does. The leave given to the Judiciary Committee is subject only to the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the bill providing for the reorganization of the Treasury Department.

Mr. DURHAM. After these privileged motions are exhausted will the bill in relation to the Freedman's Savings Bank be called?

The SPEAKER. It will be called in the morning hour, unless the gentleman chooses to try and get the House to fix some special time for its consideration.

Mr. DURHAM. I tried to get that consent the other day, but it was refused.

The SPEAKER. It is now the pending business in the morning hour.

Mr. DURHAM. Well, let it stay there.

Mr. MAYNARD. I stated a few moments since that in the original charter of this bank the right to amend or alter it was reserved. I find that I was mistaken. It was not in the original charter, but was incorporated into an amendment which was subsequently adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour of one o'clock having arrived, the Committee on the Judiciary is entitled to the floor, subject to the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KELLOGG. I now propose to make the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order, being the bill providing for the reorganization of the Treasury Department. During the last session that bill was kept off from consideration by the appropriation bills, with the distinct understanding with the Committee on Appropriations that it should come in before the appropriation bills at this session. It is important that this matter should be settled now if it is to be settled at all, and all have conceded that this Department ought to be reorganized, for at present nine-tenths of it is a mere foot-ball in appropriation bills, not organized by law. If the House will agree to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union I will ask only five minutes for general debate, and will take up only so much time as may be necessary to pass the bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the House goes into Committee of the Whole on this bill, will the Judiciary Committee come in for a day after it shall be disposed of? If we do not, it is a very serious matter.

Mr. KELLOGG. The committee having charge of this bill were postponed by the Appropriation Committee for four months. That committee has now stepped down for one day, and I hope the Judiciary Committee will not take their place.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I think that mine was an order made by unanimous consent, and is therefore a higher order than this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts yielded to reserve the right to make this motion to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. KELLOGG. I made that a condition for agreeing to the gentleman's motion.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I yield then only that the sense of the House may be tested on the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from Massachusetts asked for the privilege that his committee should have a day to report, the gentleman from Connecticut made it a condition that his motion should be admitted.

Mr. KELLOGG. And the House agreed to that.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. On condition the House should go on with the gentleman's bill if they chose to do so.

The SPEAKER. If they chose, of course; it is for the House to determine the question. If the House goes into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, they do it upon the general Calendar, and the Chair is compelled to remind gentlemen that there is no such motion as a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on a particular bill. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to go into Committee of the Whole. If he finds that his bill is preceded on the Calendar by other bills, it will not be the fault of the Chair, but the fault of the Calendar.

Mr. KELLOGG. This bill having been made a special order, cannot I move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon it?

The SPEAKER. There is no such motion known to the rules strictly as going into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up anything. The House goes into two committees, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and the Committee of the Whole, which is the Committee on the Private Calendar. After going into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it is the duty of whoever presides to take up whatever is first upon the Calendar. Special orders come before other business, and the appropriation bills have precedence.

Mr. KELLOGG. There is no appropriation bill ahead of this bill, and this bill is a special order.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman will observe by the rules that an appropriation bill is preferred to other business. The Chair does not want the gentleman to fall into any trap.

Mr. KELLOGG. But the Committee on Appropriations have agreed to give me this day, and I hope the House will stand by me in my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Indian appropriation bill stands ahead of the gentleman's bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. But I understand that the Committee on Appropriations are willing to postpone that bill until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. It would require a majority vote of the Committee of the Whole to do that. The Committee on Appropriations have no right to make any such disposition of the business on the Calendar.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then I move simply that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 43, noes 61; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KELLOGG, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 94.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The vote just taken by the House leaves the Committee on the Judiciary entitled to the floor for reports.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3006) authorizing the President to nominate Holmes Wikoff an assistant surgeon in the Navy;

An act (H. R. No. 3572) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 4462) for the relief of Alexander Burtch.

APPOINTMENTS ON COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER announced the following appointments to fill vacancies:

Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812—ANDREW SLOAN, of Georgia.

Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department—ANDREW SLOAN, of Georgia.

Committee on the District of Columbia—JOHN M. THOMPSON, of Pennsylvania.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYÉS—RIGHT OF FRANCHISE.

Mr. FINCK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the petition of Captain W. B. Brown and fifty-four others, asking legislation protecting employés of the Government in their right of franchise; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

MEXICAN CITIZENS.

Mr. FINCK also, from the same committee, reported back with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 1342) declaratory of the rights of such Mexican citizens as were established in territories acquired from Mexico by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Gadsden treaty, and who have since continued to reside within the limits of the United States.

The bill provides that all those Mexican citizens and residents who, at the dates of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Gadsden treaty, respectively, were established as such citizens and residents in any territories acquired by the United States from Mexico through the said treaties, and who have since continued to reside in good faith within the limits of the United States, are, and shall be, entitled to have, possess, exercise, and enjoy all such rights, powers, and privileges under the law as belong and are accorded to citizens of the United States.

The second section provides that every such Mexican citizen and resident, having continued to reside as aforesaid, has, and shall continue to have, the right to sue and be sued, to acquire, possess, hold, enjoy, and dispose of property, whether real, personal, or mixed, as fully as any citizen of the United States.

The third section provides that any such Mexican citizen and resident, having continued to reside as aforesaid, and being desirous of actual naturalization under the Constitution and the laws of the United States, shall be entitled to the same on proof of such residence and the other legal requisites in any competent court, without a previous declaration of intention.

The first amendment reported from the committee was to strike out of sections 1 and 2 the following:

And who have since continued to reside in good faith within the limits of the United States, are, and shall be, entitled to have, possess, exercise, and enjoy all such rights, powers, and privileges under the law as belong and are accorded to citizens of the United States.

Sec. 2. That every such Mexican citizen and resident, having continued to reside as aforesaid, has, and shall continue to have.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And who elected to retain their Mexican citizenship under the provisions of said treaties, and have since continued in good faith to reside within the limits of the United States, shall have.

So that the section will read as follows:

That all those Mexican citizens and residents who, at the dates of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Gadsden treaty, respectively, were established as such citizens and residents in any territories acquired by the United States from Mexico through the said treaties, and who elected to retain their Mexican citizenship under the provisions of said treaties, and have since continued in good faith to reside within the limits of the United States, shall have the right to sue and be sued, to acquire, possess, hold, enjoy, and dispose of property, whether real, personal, or mixed, as fully as any citizen of the United States.

The second amendment was to change the number of section 3 to "2."

Mr. FINCK. I will state very briefly for the information of the House that this question originates under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the ratifications of which were exchanged between this Government and Mexico in May, 1848. That treaty is to be found in the ninth volume of the Statutes at Large. Article 8 of that treaty refers to the condition of citizens who were in the territory acquired by this Government from Mexico. That article provides that—

Those who prefer to remain in said Territory may either retain the title and right of Mexican citizens or acquire those of citizens of the United States; but they shall be under the obligation to make their election within one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty; and those who shall remain in said territory, after the expiration of that year, without having declared their intention to retain the character of Mexicans shall be considered to have elected to become citizens of the United States.

It turns out that quite a number of Mexicans who were residents of the Territory when it was acquired under this treaty elected in some manner, within the year, to retain their Mexican citizenship. But it has since been held by one of the courts of New Mexico that that election was irregular in that Territory and Arizona, and confusion has ensued. Sometimes these people are summoned to serve upon juries in the courts; sometimes they present themselves for the purpose of voting at the polls. The question as to their right under this treaty has become a matter of dispute. The governor of New Mexico called the attention of the Legislature of that Territory to this question some years since, and suggested that the Legislature should call upon the Congress of the United States to define the rights of these people. It is represented to the committee that they comprise some of the best citizens of the Territory. As a matter of law under the law of nations, by the acquisition of this Territory, which included Arizona, by the United States, these Mexican citizens would have become citizens of the United States. As they now many of them desire to become citizens of the United States notwithstanding their declaration, it is proposed by this bill to give them the right to make a declaration on oath before a court competent to naturalize, if they have the other qualifications to become citizens, and become naturalized without having first made a declaration of intention. I think this appeals so strongly to Congress that the necessity ought at once to be relieved by the passage of this bill.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. FINCK. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HALE, of New York. With a brief preliminary statement?

Mr. FINCK. Certainly.

Mr. HALE, of New York. There is, as is well known, a commission now in existence and in session, I think in this city, to adjudicate upon claims of American citizens against Mexico, and of Mexican citizens against the United States. I wish to inquire whether this bill is drawn with a view of changing the status of any Mexican citizens under the present provision of the treaty, so as to enable them to have a standing as American citizens against Mexico before that commission?

Mr. FINCK. The bill contains nothing of that kind, sir.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I am inclined to think that the bill ought to be guarded by inserting a provision that it shall not operate to give such a standing before that commission.

Mr. FINCK. That question is not involved in this bill at all.

Mr. HALE, of New York. It seems to me that it is involved. I do not know that such a case exists; but as I know how many questions of a similar character have arisen before that commission, it seems to me very probable that this bill will cover cases of persons hitherto Mexican citizens, making them citizens of the United States perhaps for the very purpose of giving them a standing before that commission. Of course I do not impute any such motive to the committee.

Mr. FINCK. I reply to the gentleman that this bill includes only the Mexicans who at the time of the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty between our Government and Mexico were within the boundaries of acquired territory and who have constantly since that time continued in good faith to reside within these boundaries.

Mr. HALE, of New York. But they elected to remain Mexican citizens.

Mr. FINCK. They did so elect, but it has been declared by one of the territorial courts that that election was irregular, and that such persons hold an uncertain and undefined position. I ask the Clerk to read a portion of the message of the governor of New Mexico in 1866.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me a single suggestion before that extract is read?

Mr. FINCK. I wish to have this read first.

The Clerk read as follows:

That class of the population of this Territory who have retained the title and rights of Mexican citizens, and who, by a late opinion of the judiciary of this Territory, have been disfranchised, should be incorporated and regarded as a part and portion of the political community of New Mexico. Many of this class of persons were misled and precipitated into the acts which seem to have been an election to retain the character of Mexican citizens. But it is not believed that that legal formality has been observed in the supposed election which should deprive this class of our population of the rights and privileges which pertain to those who were not misled. The Congress of the United States only can remedy this matter. We all know that many of the most intelligent, virtuous, and wealthy residents of New Mexico regret the excitement and circumstances of the time when they were hastily placed in a false position in the land of their birth and that of their ancestors.

Mr. FINCK. I now yield for a moment to the gentleman from Arizona, [Mr. MCCORMICK.]

Mr. MCCORMICK. I simply desire to say that I introduced this bill for the reason that, however clear and explicit the provisions of the treaty, some of the rights of these Mexican citizens have at times been called in question in the courts and elsewhere. One or more of the United States judges in Arizona have written me upon the subject, and suggested a declaratory enactment of this character as desirable, and, indeed, necessary. The last clause of the bill confers a privilege that may with propriety be given to persons who have so long in good faith lived under and respected our national flag and laws.

Mr. FINCK. I call for the previous question.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Before the gentleman does that I wish to submit an amendment, providing in substance that this act shall not be construed to give to any person a standing before the American and Mexican joint commission who is not now by law entitled to such standing.

Mr. FINCK. I am perfectly willing to admit such an amendment. I call the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was read, as follows:

At the end of the first and the beginning of the second section, strike out the following:

And who have since continued to reside in good faith within the limits of the United States, are, and shall be, entitled to have, possess, exercise, and enjoy all such rights, powers, and privileges under the law as belong and are accorded to citizens of the United States.

SEC. 2. That every such Mexican citizen and resident, having continued to reside as aforesaid, has and shall continue to have.

And insert the following:

And who elected to retain their Mexican citizenship under the provisions of said treaties, but have since continued in good faith to reside within the limits of the United States, shall have.

Change the number of section 3 to section 2.

Mr. FINCK. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] can be added to the first amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from New York, as reduced to writing, will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the first section the following:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to give to any person a standing before the United States and Mexican commission as a citizen of the United States who is not by existing law or treaty entitled to such standing.

The amendment of Mr. HALE, of New York, to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FINCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SURETIES OF GREEN W. CALDWELL, OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the bill (H. R. No. 2576) for the relief of the principal and sureties on the official bond of Green W. Caldwell, late superintendent of the branch mint at Charlotte, North Carolina, with the recommendation that it do lie upon the table. The parties who petitioned for this a long time ago are all dead, and it is not now asked for.

The bill was laid on the table.

NEW STATE OUT OF LOUISIANA AND TEXAS.

Mr. ELDREDGE also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3776) to create a new State out of the States of Louisiana and Texas, with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The bill was laid on the table.

CLAIMS OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a bill, which is based on numerous petitions, with the recommendation that it do pass. It is a bill (H. R. No. 4532) extending the time within which certain cases may be prosecuted in the Court of Claims.

The bill, which was read a first and second time, provides that the time within which claims for back pay, bounties, extra pay, and pensions, accruing to persons in the military or naval service of the United States during the war of the rebellion, may be presented to the Court of Claims, shall be extended, so that such claims may be prosecuted in said court at any time within three years from the passage of this act, and the provision of section 1069 of an act entitled "An act to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, 1873," approved June 22, 1874, is hereby modified in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I ask the clerk to read the memorial I send up, to show precisely what that provision is and what remedy this bill is intended to furnish.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

Your memorialists respectfully represent that some of them were in the Army and some in the Navy during the war of the rebellion; that in the final settlement of their claims against the Government for back pay, bounties, extra pay, pensions, &c., adverse decisions have been rendered and denials of their claims made, which your memorialists believe unjust and erroneous; that the laws of Congress which provide for such cases being carried to the Court of Claims limit the time within which suits can be instituted to six years from the dates when the claims accrued; that in many of this class of cases that time had elapsed when the adverse decisions of the Departments were rendered, and thus your memorialists have no benefit of a resort to the courts. They therefore pray that the Court of Claims be authorized to hear and determine, subject to appeal to the Supreme Court, all such cases at any time within three years after the passage of the act.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The only point in the bill, Mr. Speaker, is whether the United States shall insist upon the statute of limitation or not.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I made the point of order on this bill some time ago.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The only point in the bill is whether the United States intends to plead the statute of limitations against the honest claims of soldiers and sailors who served during the late war. That is the whole question. The bill provides the statute shall not apply and these parties shall have the right to prosecute their claims in the Court of Claims.

Mr. HALE, of New York. It is only used against dishonest claims.

Mr. ELDREDGE. These are honest claims. It does not add to or renew any claim, but simply provides these soldiers and sailors, who may have lost, by lapse of time, the privilege of going to the Court of Claims with their claims, may still have three years within which to present them before the Court of Claims.

Mr. POLAND. I think it is clear the point of order does not lie against this bill, as it simply regulates the time within which these persons may bring suit.

Mr. HALE, of New York. And thereby money be taken out of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. It is occasionally well to have the rule read on this subject, because it is very sweeping and comprehensive. The Clerk will read the rule under which the gentleman from Vermont makes his point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

All proceedings touching appropriations of money, and all bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, shall be first discussed in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The question is whether this bill would require an appropriation of money. The Chair thinks it would. The rule is sweeping. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If the gentleman from Vermont insists on such a proposition, of course I cannot help it; he must take the responsibility.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole, and ordered to be printed.

ARREST AND DELIVERY OF DOMESTIC FUGITIVES.

Mr. TREMAIN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 3888) to make further provisions for the arrest, detention, and delivery of domestic fugitives from justice; and the same was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO NATURALIZATION LAWS.

Mr. TREMAIN also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the petition of citizens of New York, to amend the naturalization laws; and the same was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. TREMAIN also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with the recommendation that it do not pass, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 122) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be laid on the table.

Mr. COX. Let the proposed amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Congress shall not make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of individual debts. Congress shall pass no law impairing the obligation of contracts.

Mr. POTTER. I want to say that I dissent from the report of the committee.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was laid on the table.

BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. TREMAIN also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 3880) amendatory of the act of June 22, 1874, relating to bankruptcy.

The bill was read. It provides that so much of section 9 of the act approved June 22, 1874, entitled "An act to amend and supplement an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' approved March 2, 1867, and for other purposes," as relates to cases of discharge in involuntary or compulsory bankruptcy, shall be deemed and taken to apply to all proceedings in involuntary or compulsory bankruptcy, whether the same were commenced before or after the passage of said act.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "proceedings," in line 10, the word "pending."

And add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, The bankrupt shall be entitled to a discharge according to the other provisions of said act.

Mr. TREMAIN. This bill simply states a question about which there have been conflicting decisions of the courts; and its purpose is to bring all cases under a uniform rule such as was established by the act as it was amended at the last session of Congress, so that all cases which were pending when that act passed or have since been commenced shall be governed by the rule provided by that act, so far as it relates to the amount of percentage necessary to be realized from the assets of involuntary bankrupts in order to entitle them to their discharge. I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TREMAIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TEXAS INDEMNITY BONDS.

Mr. TREMAIN also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with the recommendation that it do pass, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 4001) to provide for the redemption of overdue bonds of the United States known as Texas indemnity bonds.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the governor of the State of Texas, for the use of that State, the par value of one hundred and fifty-one bonds of the United States, and the coupons due thereon, numbered 4544 to 4604, consecutively and both inclusive, of the series of bonds issued under the act of September 9, 1850, known as Texas indemnity bonds, and to enter the same on the books of the Treasury as redeemed.

The amendment reported by the committee was as follows:

Add at the end of the bill these words:

On the execution to the United States by the State of Texas of a bond to indemnify the United States for any losses they may sustain in consequence of such payment in the penal sum of $250,000, such bond to be duly authorized by the Legislature of the State of Texas and to be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. TREMAIN. I will send to the reporters and have printed as a part of my remarks without asking it to be read, unless some gentleman desires it, the petition of the State of Texas relating to this matter.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I raise the point of order on the bill.

Mr. TREMAIN. It will be perceived that the State of Texas is to indemnify the Government of the United States for any losses that may be sustained under this bill which is intended to provide for the redemption of these bonds under a decree of the Supreme Court decreeing the title to be in the State, but which cannot be made effectual on account of the absence from the country of the parties who hold the bonds.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I would like to inquire of the gentleman who has charge of the bill whether these are bonds that are in litigation between the State of Texas and other parties?

Mr. TREMAIN. They have been in litigation only so far as a suit has been decided in favor of the State of Texas.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. There are no other suits?

Mr. TREMAIN. Not that I am aware of. There was a suit brought by the State of Texas against the parties holding these bonds, and a decree of the Supreme Court has been entered in favor of the State of Texas as having the title, but the parties being out of the jurisdiction of the court cannot be compelled to produce them here. There is no litigation now pending. There has been an absolute decree, found in 7 Wallace. I have here the petition of the State, through the governor of Texas, and shall print it as part of my remarks.

The petition is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petition of the State of Texas respectfully represents—

That by virtue of the authority contained in the act of Congress of September 9, 1850, the Secretary of the Treasury issued to the State of Texas $5,000,000 of bonds, denominated "Texan indemnity stock," bearing date January 1, 1851, and redeemable after the 31st day of December, 1864, and made payable to the State of Texas or bearer.

That at the time of receiving said bonds the State of Texas, by act of her Legislature of December 16, 1851, provided as follows: "That no bond issued as aforesaid, as a portion of said five millions of stock payable to bearer, shall be available in the hands of any holder until the same shall have been indorsed in the city of Austin by the governor of Texas."

That of the bonds so issued to the State those numbered from 1 to 4218 inclusive had been indorsed by a governor of Texas, in accordance with the provisions of the aforegoing act, and disposed of before active rebellion in that State, and had been redeemed at the Treasury of the United States.

There were left in the treasury of the State at the breaking out of the rebellion seven hundred and eighty-two of said bonds, numbered from 4218 to 5000 inclusive.

On the 16th of March, 1861, the insurgent convention of Texas, having previously declared the adoption of the secession ordinance, and that Texas had withdrawn from the Union of the States under the Federal Constitution, passed an ordinance declaring that Sam Houston, governor of the State, and E. W. Cave, secretary of state, had refused or omitted to take the oath prescribed, and that their offices were vacant; that the lieutenant-governor should exercise the authority and perform the duties appertaining to the office of governor, and that the deposed officers should deliver and turn over to their successors in office the great seal of the State and all papers, archives, and property in their possession belonging or appertaining to the State.

By virtue of this ordinance, and under the direction and by the orders of the convention, the duly qualified officers of the State were deposed, and its property, including the bonds above referred to as in its treasury at the inauguration of the rebellion, were seized by the insurgents.

Of said bonds so seized, as above set forth, six hundred and thirty-four, numbered from 4219 to 4694 inclusive, and from 4843 to 5000 inclusive, passed into the possession and under the control of an organization known as the "military board," established in the State under the authority of the following acts of the insurgent Legislature, to be disposed of by said board in execution of the trust and duty imposed upon it by said acts:

CHAPTER LVI.

An act to provide arms and ammunition, and for the manufacture of arms and ordnance for the military defense of the State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Texas, That $500,000 of the bonds authorized to be issued by "An act authorizing a loan and imposing a specific tax to meet the principal and interest thereof, under the provisions of the thirty-third section of the seventh article of the constitution of the State," approved April 8, 1861, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of procuring arms and ammunition, and for the manufacture of arms and ordnance for the military defense of the State.

SEC. 2. The governor, comptroller, and treasurer are hereby created a military board, any two of whom may act, for the purpose of disposing of said bonds, in any manner they may see proper, in order to accomplish the objects mentioned in the preceding section. Said board may sell the bonds for money, and then buy the arms and ammunition, or for anything else in order to carry out the provisions of the first section of this act.

SEC. 3. That said military board shall have the power to appoint one or more agents to negotiate said bonds, and to purchase said arms and ammunition, and to superintend the manufacture of arms and ordnance. Such agent or agents shall be governed in his or their negotiations by the instructions of said military board.

SEC. 4. Such agent or agents shall be entitled to such reasonable compensation for his or their services as shall be agreed upon between him or them and said military board.

SEC. 5. That said military board may, in their discretion, establish a foundery for the manufacture of ordnance and one or more manufactories of small-arms to be located at such place or places as said board may select.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Approved January 11, 1862.

CHAPTER LXXXI.

An act to provide funds for military purposes.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Texas, That the governor, comptroller, and treasurer shall constitute a military board, and a majority of said board shall have the power to provide for the defense of the State by means of any bonds and coupons which may be in the treasury on any account, and may so use such funds or their proceeds, and therefore may sell, hypothecate, or barter such bonds and coupons, provided such disposals shall not exceed the amount of $100,000,000 of such bonds and coupons, and that they shall not be disposed of at any discount greater than 20 per cent. of their face amounts.

SEC. 2. Any bonds which may be disposed of under the provisions of this act shall be substituted by equal amounts of any bonds of the Confederate States of America that may be obtained by this State, and the bonds so substituted, respectively, in all respects shall be in place of the funds disposed of as aforesaid.

SEC. 3. That this act be in force from and after its passage.

Approved January 11, 1862.

On the same day, and in connection with the above recited acts, namely, the 11th of January, 1862, the insurgent Legislature passed an act repealing the act of the 16th of December, 1851, prohibiting alienation of the indemnity bonds without the indorsement of the governor of Texas. Said repealing act is as follows:

CHAPTER LXV.

An act to repeal a certain act herein mentioned.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Texas, That an act to provide for the reception and deposit of a portion of the indemnity due the State of Texas by the United States for the sale of a portion of her northwestern territory, under the provisions of an act of Congress approved September 9, 1850, which act of the Legislature was approved December 16, 1851, is hereby repealed, but without prejudice to any vested rights that may have arisen from said act; and this act shall take effect and be in force from its passage.

This repealing act was designed to facilitate the negotiation of the bonds in question by the military board, and therefore in aid of the execution of the trust and agency of the board to raise funds for military purposes and in support of the insurgent cause. Had the bonds borne the indorsement of the governor of the insurgent organization of Texas, they would have been comparatively without value in the market. Under the authority of the aforegoing acts the said military board delivered to one John M. Swisher, as its agent, three hundred of said bonds, numbered from 4395 to 4694, inclusive, to be by him taken to England and there negotiated, for the purpose of raising means to carry on the war against the United States. Of said bonds so delivered to Swisher, one hundred and forty-nine, numbered from 4395 to 4543, were sold to George Peabody & Co., and have been redeemed at the Treasury of the United States. The remaining one hundred and fifty-one, numbered from 4544 to 4694, inclusive, were deposited by said Swisher with the firm of Droege & Co., of Manchester, England, for and on account of the State of Texas, and to this one hundred and fifty-one bonds this memorial has special reference.

The State of Texas has repeatedly demanded of said Droege & Co. the delivery of said bonds, but her demand has been refused or evaded on various pretenses. Droege & Co. set up no claim, title, or right in themselves to said bonds, but now pretend to hold them by reason of a notice served on them by one John Chiles, averring a claim of title thereto in himself.

On the 12th day of January, 1865, the military board of Texas executed a certain contract with said Chiles and one George W. White, purporting to convey to them certain of said indemnity bonds then in the treasury of the insurgent State, and also seventy-six of said bonds so "on deposit with Droege & Co., England."

On the 15th of February, 1867, the reconstructed State of Texas filed a bill in equity in the Supreme Court of the United States to set aside and vacate said contract with White and Chiles, and asking that she might be deemed to be the lawful owner of said bonds mentioned in said contract, and entitled to receive and collect the same. At the December term of the Supreme Court, 1868, a decree was passed in accordance with the prayer of the said bill, adjudging and decreeing the title to be in the State, and enjoining the said White and Chiles from setting up a claim to any of said bonds. (See case State of Texas vs. White and Chiles, 7 Wallace, 701, 742.) But this decree was not respected by said Droege & Co., of England, who, notwithstanding, refused to deliver said bonds to your memorialist, but still hold the same, pretending that they do so for their own protection against the alleged claim of the said Chiles. And the said Chiles now pretends, as your memorialist is informed, that he claims said bonds under some other and different contract with the military board, executed subsequent to the date of the contract above referred to, to wit, on or about the 4th of March, 1865, and in which said White has no interest. The archives of the State have been carefully examined, and no copy, memorandum, or reference to any such alleged contract can be found, and your memorialist believes that none such ever existed, and charges that if any such does exist, it is void and of no effect by reason of the application of the principles pronounced in said case of Texas vs. White and Chiles.

Your memorialist further represents that said Chiles and the said Droege & Co. have fraudulently confederated and combined for the purpose of forcing the State of Texas to institute proceedings in the courts of England, where it is hoped and expected that a decision may be obtained in favor of the said Chiles or Droege & Co. against the said State on certain of the war bonds issued by the insurgent government of Texas, and which have been bought up by one or both of said parties, as openly avowed by said Chiles since the close of the war, and by force of which decision the said indemnity bonds in the hands of Droege & Co. may be subjected to the payment of any judgment that may be obtained against the State in any court of Great Britian to whose jurisdiction she may subject herself by instituting proceedings therein. To accomplish this purpose, the said Droege & Co. not only refuse to deliver said bonds to the State of Texas, though admitting them to be held for said State, and asserting in themselves no claim of title thereto, but carefully and persistently avoid bringing said bonds to the United States, where they might become subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of this country, and have not ventured to present them at the treasury for redemption, though they have been overdue since the 31st day of December, 1864, and consequently have been bearing no interest since that time.

The State of Texas has repudiated said war bonds, as having been issued by an insurgent and unlawful government for the purpose of prosecuting the war against the Federal Government, and as she was required to do by the fourth section of the fourteenth article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, by which it is provided that "neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States."

The State of Texas, therefore, to the end that her rights may be fully protected by the lawful authorities of this country, and that she may not be compelled to humiliate herself by becoming a suitor in the courts of a foreign country, and thereby submit to their jurisdiction the most important and delicate questions of American polity and constitutional law, prays the Congress of the United States to inquire into the subject of this memorial and by law direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to her the full amount of the said one hundred and fifty-one indemnity bonds due by the United States, numbered from 4544 to 4694, inclusive, with coupons thereto attached, now on deposit as the property of said State with said Droege & Co., of Manchester, England, and to enter said bonds on the records or books of the Treasury as discharged and redeemed.

RICHARD COKE,
Governor of the State of Texas,
By THOMAS J. DURANT,
R. T. MERRICK,
His Attorneys in Fact.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think this bill should go to the Committee of the Whole as well as bills making appropriations reported by other committees.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. In my judgment this bill is not open to the point of order. If the Speaker will allow me to state the facts, it will be seen that the United States owes to the State of Texas certain bonds. During the war some of those bonds were taken and carried to Europe and sold. The United States owes them either to the party in Europe or the party in Texas. The Supreme Court of the United States have decided that these bonds were illegally taken; and therefore they are the property of the State of Texas. The State of Texas has attempted to get them back out of the hands of those parties in Europe, but they keep out of the jurisdiction where they can be sued, and will not bring them back.

Now, this bill only provides that the United States may pay the State of Texas, who own these bonds, and it does not impose any new liability on the United States; and if the man in Europe who has possession of these bonds comes and presents them hereafter, the State of Texas is required by this bill to indemnify the United States by a bond sufficient to pay all payments that the United States may be required to make, and in addition to that to give security on other bonds of a like kind in the Treasury of the United States; so that this bill takes no money out of the Treasury that by existing law would not go out of the Treasury, because it only calls on the United States to pay this money to an honest creditor, and not to a dishonest man who has stolen these bonds and gone off to Europe. In other words, it simply provides to whom this money shall be paid. It makes no appropriation.

Mr. GIDDINGS rose.

The SPEAKER. The merits of the case are not under discussion yet. If the gentleman has any remarks to make upon the point of order, the Chair will hear them.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I do not think the point of order applies to this case. This is for the payment of overdue bonds, and an appropriation has already been made to pay the bonds, but the party who holds them refuses to present them for payment. They are part of a lot of three hundred bonds taken by the military forces in Texas in 1862, and sent to Europe and placed in the hands of parties there as brokers. One hundred and forty-nine of those three hundred bonds were sold to Peabody & Co., and a part of the purchase-money was paid. Before all the purchase-money due upon the sale of the one hundred and forty-nine bonds was paid by Peabody & Co., it was ascertained that the Treasurer of the United States refused to pay these bonds, because the State of Texas had passed a statute requiring that such bonds held by the State should be indorsed by the governor of the State. They had not that indorsement, because the loyal governor of the State had been removed, and it was not thought proper to send the name of the governor-elect to the Treasury of the United States. Afterward Peabody & Co. enjoined the funds arising from the sale of the one hundred and forty-nine bonds. There is no doubt that they, the holders in England, were merely brokers for a private individual, and that no consideration ever passed to the State of Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is not in order in discussing the merits of the bill. The only question before the House now is the parliamentary point made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.] He makes the point that this bill appropriates money from the Treasury of the United States, and therefore should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Upon that point my answer is that these bonds are overdue, that an appropriation has already been made to pay them, and they have not been paid because the party who holds them will not present them, and he holds them fraudulently.

The SPEAKER. That is a point on the merits of the question. The only question is, does this bill take money out of the Treasury of the United States which would not go out of the Treasury if the bill were not passed?

Mr. GIDDINGS. The bill provides that the State of Texas shall give an indemnifying bond to the United States.

The SPEAKER. That is not the point. Does the bill take out of the Treasury money which would not go out if it were not passed?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If this bill were not passed the money would have to go to the other party.

The SPEAKER. If this bill does not take money out of the Treasury, there is no use in passing it. The Chair knows nothing about the merits of this claim, and it would not be proper for him to express any opinion about it if he did; but the Chair thinks that it directs the payment out of the Treasury of the United States of $151,000 in a certain mode, and therefore that it is strictly liable to the point of order that it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Under the ruling of the Chair the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

DISTRICT JUDGE OF TENNESSEE.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2777) providing for a judge for the western district of Tennessee, &c.

Mr. SENER. That bill is liable to a point of order.

Mr. WHITE. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and read the first five sections.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I make the point of order on that bill that it creates a new officer and provides for the paymant of a salary to the officer to be appointed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better wait until the Clerk has read the sixth section of the bill.

Mr. HALE, of New York. The first section provides for the appointment of this officer, and I think we may presume that he is to be paid.

Mr. COX. There is another point which I desire to make, which is a political one, upon that bill.

Mr. WHITE. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] understood the merits of the case, I am sure he would not object to the bill.

Mr. COX. Some one is to be appointed as judge, and I object to the appointment of anybody by the present Executive.

The SPEAKER. That is not a point of order.

Mr. COX. No, sir; but it is a moral point.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. CESSNA, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely upon the following bills; which were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 3956) for the relief of the Southern States by the compromise and settlement of their debts; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3846) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1874.

MILEAGE AND TRAVELING EXPENSES.

Mr. CESSNA, from the same committee, reported a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 3899) explanatory of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874;" which was read a first and second time.

The first section of the bill provides that the proviso in the sixth paragraph of the act referred to shall only be held and considered as applying to officers of the Army and clerks and employés of officers of the Army and of the War Department, and that all accounts of attorneys, marshals, clerks, and all officers except officers of the Army and clerks and employés of officers of the Army and of the War Department for mileage and for expenses incurred subsequent to the 1st day of July, 1874, shall be audited, allowed, and paid at the Treasury Department in the same manner as if said act had not been passed.

The second section provides that for services hereafter rendered no constructive mileage shall be allowed or paid to marshals of the United States, and that in auditing, settling, and paying such officers for services allowance shall only be made for the number of miles actually and necessarily traveled by them in the service of process or performance of official duty.

Mr. SPEER. I raise the point of order that this bill increases the compensation now authorized by law.

Mr. CESSNA. It does not; it simply declares the true intent and meaning of the proviso of the Army appropriation bill of last year.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the point involved here to be that by a proviso in the Army appropriation bill of last year a certain rate of mileage was established by law and that the construction of that proviso included a certain class of officers. This bill is intended to relieve a portion of those officers from that construction.

Mr. CESSNA. That is true.

The SPEAKER. Then of course this bill will necessitate an appropriation and the taking of money out of the Treasury.

Mr. CESSNA. The second section will save more money to the Treasury, by reducing the accounts for mileage.

The SPEAKER. Parliamentary rules do not recognize offsets. The bill is subject to the point of order.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

POTOMAC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. CESSNA, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a joint resolution (H. R. No. 117) relative to the Potomac Railroad.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I think a point of order will lie against this joint resolution.

Mr. CESSNA. There is no question of that, if it is raised. But I think there will be so much advantage to the Government that it ought not to be raised.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Let it go to the Committee of the Whole, where we can examine and discuss it.

Mr. CESSNA. That is, let it go "where the woodbine twineth."

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

The joint resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

TERMS OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. POTTER. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back, as a substitute for House joint resolution No. 98, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 147) to fix the term of the presidential office at six years, and to make the President ineligible for more than six years in any term of twelve years after the next presidential election.

The SPEAKER. The substitute only will be read.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid as a part of the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE XVI.

1. From and after the next election for a President of the United States the President shall hold his office during the term of six years, and, together with the Vice-President chosen for the same term, be elected in the manner as now provided or may hereafter be provided; but neither the President nor the Vice-President, when the office of President has devolved upon him, shall be eligible for re-election as President.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the original resolution may be reported.

Mr. POTTER. The substitute reported from the committee is substantially the same as the original resolution, except that the ineligibility which it imposes is made permanent, and is extended to the Vice-President whenever the presidential office may devolve upon him.

Whatever question, Mr. Speaker, there may have been upon this subject in the public mind years ago, your committee think that now, with the vastly increased Federal patronage which has grown up of late years, the time has arrived for such a change in the Constitution as is proposed by this resolution. At any rate it is a question which has been much discussed, and probably every gentleman in the House has fully made up his own mind upon the subject, and so I think nearly every thoughtful citizen of the United States must have done. I shall therefore proceed at once to call the previous question upon this resolution, only saying that if the proposed amendment to the Constitution shall become operative, it will in nowise affect the eligibility of the present incumbent for re-election at the next presidential election. With that statement I call the previous question.

Mr. HALE, of New York. May I ask my colleague [Mr. POTTER] whether this will extend the term of the present Executive?

Mr. POTTER. It does not extend the term of the present Executive.

Mr. COX. Does my colleague [Mr. HALE] want the term of the present Executive extended?

Mr. POTTER. My colleague [Mr. HALE] can himself propose such an amendment if he desires to do so.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I merely asked the question that it might assist us in deciding how to vote.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it has been usual to order the yeas and nays on the adoption of a constitutional amendment.

Mr. POTTER. Of course that is proper.

Several MEMBERS called for the reading of the joint resolution; and it was again read.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] whether he thinks it proper that a constitutional amendment should be put through without any opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, that is a matter entirely within the discretion of the House. I supposed that if there was any question which had been discussed and rediscussed until every person within and without this House was informed about it, it was this very question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman to see whether I understand this proposition, for I am in favor of it. Suppose that after the adoption of this constitutional amendment a President should die one week before his term of six years had expired and the Vice-President should be sworn in and hold the presidential office for a week; under this provision, would not the Vice-President, serving as President for that one week, be thereby rendered forever ineligible to the office of President? I ask this question as a matter of construction.

Mr. POTTER. It is a perfectly proper question. As I understand this proposition, it would have precisely the effect suggested by the gentleman. How else are you going to prevent the Vice-President from being again eligible when by accident the office of President devolves upon him?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know that we could do it in any other way. I should be in favor myself of abolishing the office of Vice-President, and it seems to me this is a good time to do it.

Mr. POTTER. It has been often suggested that the Vice-President ought never to be eligible at all to the office of President; but if he is so unfortunate as to have the office of President devolved upon him, he should take it with all its restrictions and burdens.

Mr. GARFIELD. I only wished to suggest the propriety of dispensing altogether with the office of Vice-President.

Mr. POTTER. I shall be ready to discuss any such amendment whenever the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] can bring it before the House. I am now, however, instructed to report the amendment I have brought before the House in its present form.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] is entitled to one hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of my friend from New York whether he will not allow an amendment, providing that no citizen shall be eligible to the office of President of the United States for a longer term than eight years?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is too late to amend; the previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. To receive an amendment would require a reconsideration of the vote by which the main question was ordered. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] yield for that?

Mr. POTTER. No, sir. This proposition limits the eligibility of any person after the next election to a term of six years.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would have the limitation operate from this period.

Mr. POTTER. If anybody proposes to reach that end, there are other methods more feasible for attaining the object than a constitutional amendment, which requires the approval of two-thirds of each House of Congress and three-fourths of the State Legislatures, and which ought never be determined on personal grounds.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I wish to inquire whether the previous question has been ordered?

The SPEAKER. It has been. There was no objection to it. It is open to reconsideration.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move then to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

Mr. POTTER. The only gentleman in the House who has applied to me to speak on this question is the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR,] who wants a few moments. I think the House will give this to him without the necessity of reconsidering the main question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] is entitled to one hour and can yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. POTTER. How much time does the gentleman from Massachusetts want?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I want to say perhaps only a single sentence.

Mr. POTTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to ask any privilege that every other member of the House shall not have; but it was a surprise to me that a constitutional amendment should be presented to be put through under instructions under the previous question. There is enough objection to the operation of the previous question in ordinary transactions, as it has seemed to me, without applying it to so grave a subject as this. But if this question is not to be debated, all I wish to say on my own behalf is that while I am not of opinion that there is likely to be any occasion on which I should favor, or on which I believe the people of the country would favor the continuance of any person in the presidential office beyond two terms, I do not believe the argument in regard to the corruption of the people by executive power as one upon the strength of which the people should confess that they need such protection against such influences that they will deliberately deprive themselves of the power of selecting whom they please for their Chief Magistrate.

I remember a conversation which I had with an eminent gentleman, standing high in office in the country, in regard to the re-election of the late President Lincoln during the war. He was very much opposed to Mr. Lincoln's renomination and re-election, and did what was in his power to prevent it. I said to him then that I believed the majority of the American people intended to re-elect Mr. Lincoln, if necessary, during the rest of his life, until he was recognized in every part of this country as the President of the United States. I do not for one propose to aid in depriving the American people of the right of determining in any exigency or emergency whom they will keep in the presidential chair.

That we ever shall keep a man beyond the time Washington's example sanctioned, which is one of the traditions of the Republic, I do not believe. But the question whether we shall deprive ourselves by constitutional amendment of the right to do so, of the power to do so, is a very grave and serious one, which I think merits the consideration of this House before they adopt it.

Mr. KASSON. Before the gentleman from New York replies, if he does reply, I wish to ask him for information on two points. One is the force of the expression "from and after the next election." To my mind I did not think it was plain in the first instance, and it does not grow more plain on reflection, unless by unanimous consent of the House it means to apply to the next term; for election is one thing and the term of office is another thing.

Mr. POTTER. "After the next election the term of office shall be" is the language which is used.

Mr. KASSON. Consequently it does apply to the next President. Then the other point is——

Mr. POTTER. It applies to the President elected at the next election.

Mr. KASSON. Then the person elected at the next election President of the United States will continue for six years and be ineligible for re-election.

Mr. POTTER. I so understand it.

Mr. KASSON. The other point is this: This ineligibility is made perpetual. It has been a serious question with all popular governments, with whose history I am acquainted, whether the ineligibility ought not to apply exclusively to the next succeeding term, reserving to the people the right after the intervention of one President to re-elect a former one if they should desire to do so. It is on that account I regret the previous question, because I would like to have some expression of the feeling of the House on that particular point.

Mr. MAYNARD. Let me ask a single question. Suppose this amendment should be submitted to the people or the Legislatures for their action, and it should not be ratified by a sufficient number of Legislatures prior to the next presidential election, after that time would it or not be in the power of a sufficient number of Legislatures to ratify it and keep the President then elected in six years, or if they chose not to ratify it, would his term of itself expire at the end of four years? In other words, if we propose this constitutional amendment now and leave it unratified until after the next presidential election, would not it be in the power of the several Legislatures of the States to ratify it and continue the term for six years?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It would not begin to operate until after it had passed.

Mr. POTTER. And that is a complete answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR,] that this resolution tends to inhibit the people from doing as they think best. We cannot inhibit the people. All we can do is to submit it to them to say by three-fourths of their Legislatures whether they do or do not prefer this power of rechoice of President should be inhibited? About that I am of opinion, if there be anything in the world settled in the public mind, that is settled. It will be best determined when the people come to vote on this constitutional amendment whether I am right in my judgment. But whether I am or no, the people should at least have an opportunity of declaring their will in this respect.

Mr. DAWES. The construction put by the gentleman from New York may be the correct one, but in making a constitutional amendment it had better be clear beyond all doubt. It seems to me it will be better to say "from and after this becomes a part of the Constitution," or some words to that effect. His construction may be correct, but the matter should be put beyond all peradventure.

Mr. MAYNARD. If my friend from New York should be elected the next President, and he is quite as likely to be as any one of his party, he then of course would look at the subject from a different point of view from what most of us would look at it.

Mr. POTTER. If lightning should strike in that direction, I hope I will continue to look on this question of presidential re-eligibility as I do now——

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman should put the matter in the plainest words.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is it possible to get the action of three-fourths of the Legislatures of the States in season for the next presidential election?

Mr. POTTER. I presume it would be.

Mr. KASSON. There ought to be some change of expression as to when this resolution will become operative.

Mr. POTTER. Let the gentleman from Iowa frame such words as he thinks are necessary to carry out the object I understand he has in view, and I will probably assent to them.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I insist on my motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 95, noes 55.

So the motion was agreed to; and the seconding of the previous question was reconsidered.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask my friend to yield to me for a moment. I simply desire to say a word in regard to the implied censure of the Committee on the Judiciary by my colleague's remarks, that we desire to put through under the previous question a constitutional amendment. I do not think the committee is open to that objection. The only vote on the previous question was asking for unanimous consent. There was no vote. The proposition was open to debate as long as any one chose to debate it. When my colleague asked for the previous question no one objected to it, it being done, as the Chair stated, by unanimous consent. Of course, if we supposed anybody desired to debate it——

Mr. E. R. HOAR. There were two noes here. I was one; the gentleman in front of me was another. Unanimous consent was not given.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I can only say what was the intention of the committee and of my colleague, as I understand it.

Now, I want to say a word upon this question. I do not understand that Congress can control the American people on the matter of constitutional amendments except in one way. If we practically refuse to submit an amendment to them to vote upon, then they cannot have a constitutional amendment except by a convention of all the people of the States, for that is open to them under the Constitution. Therefore, when we offer a constitutional amendment to the whole people of the country, I do not think it a correct statement of the proposition to say that we attempt to bind the American people. We offer to them a proposition for them to dispose of in the States after full consideration without any previous question. But if we say we will not offer them an amendment, then I do not know any way in which they can secure its passage, and we can stand here in the way of constitutional amendments, but we cannot bind the people in any other way. Therefore I should be pretty liberal in voting propositions for constitutional amendments to be sent to the people. For if they want them they ought to have them; and if they do not want them, they will take good care not to pass them in the several States.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. Let me ask the gentleman if there have been petitions from the people or from the Legislatures of the different States in favor of this amendment?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There has been for a long series of years an agitation and a petitioning of Congress for this amendment. It has been urged all over the country; and it comes up now without any possibility of a personal relation in it. Nobody, so far as I know, has an idea of any possible personal relations of this amendment to the present Executive.

Now, for one I agree that the people ought to have the right to elect a man just so many times as they choose to do it, and nobody ought to interfere with that right. But then the people ought to have a correlative right, the right of saying that they will not elect a man but once.

Therefore I think it might be well enough to submit this amendment to the people, and not to set up our judgment that the people shall not have an opportunity to pass upon this subject. So far from attempting to bind the people upon that question by offering them the amendment, we bind them on the question when we refuse to offer them the amendment.

Now, almost any reasonable proposition in which a large portion of the people seem to be interested for an amendment of the Constitution I should be in favor of submitting to them, in order that the people might have the opportunity to say in their primary capacity as people of the States, by three-fourths of their representatives in Legislatures chosen with reference to that proposition, if they chose to make it part of a political issue—to say whether they will or will not have a constitutional amendment.

Again, sir, I do not think that this looks to the corruption of the Executive. I think it looks rather, it strikes my mind, to the effect upon Congress as regards its political action. The first Congress comes in with the President under our present system, and the second Congress goes out with the President. Now, it has been said—I do not mean to repeat the saying offensively, but simply to give it as an illustration—it has been said that the first Congress is engaged in getting offices under the new President, and the second is always engaged in seeing how to make a new President, so as to get the offices. It would be well to have one session of Congress intervening to do business without having such a temptation before them. That is one of the arguments before the country on this subject; that is one of the arguments produced before us on the question of six years.

Then, again, it is said that why we have been so unsuccessful in Vice-Presidents when they come to be Presidents—I suppose there will be a general agreement with me in the House on this subject—is that they have always looked to re-election; and, as men are very much alike all over the world, that it would be best to have the temptation of re-election taken away from the Vice-President as well as from the President.

Now, I can conceive, and there I differ from my colleague, [Mr. E. R. HOAR,] a condition of things under which I would vote for a President three, four, five, six, or nine or ten times over.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. How does my colleague differ from me in saying that?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If I do not differ from my colleague, I am glad once in my life to agree with him. I am for this proposition whether I agree or differ with him in regard to it. I believe that one of the sayings of our late President, Mr. Lincoln, which was characterized at once by good sense and good wit, was that it was not worth while to swap horses in crossing a stream. When George Washington set the example he had got across and all was peace and all was quiet. And that example might be followed in times of peace and quiet. But the time that will call for the re-election of a man as President is when a man, a strong man, has hold of the Government, and when the whole people in a time of commotion, in a time of rebellion, in times when thousands upon thousands are murdered in one section of the country without any punishment of the murderers—when the people of the country under such circumstances feel a doubt as to what will be the future of the country without a re-election, then I can conceive of the possibility of the people coming up as one man to re-elect a strong man who shall administer the executive power in the future as he has administered it in the past. Why, they will cry out in the language of the poet laureate of Great Britain—

> O God! for a man with head, heart, and hand,
> Like one of the strong ones long gone by—
> Aristocrat, democrat, autocrat,
> Whatever they call him, what care I—
> One who can rule, and dare not lie.

Now, sir, I can conceive of this as the only thing which can ever make a movement for the third presidential term successful; and I warn my friends on the other side of the House, who are looking me in the face, of it; it will be to keep one section of this country disturbed, at war with itself. If we had peace and quiet throughout the country the question of an election for a third term of a President could not have been possible under our traditions, and it is only the upturning that you threw upon us that made it possible; and if it be possible it will have been made so by you.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I have no desire or wish to discuss this question further. My sole object in interposing was to draw the attention of the House to what seemed to me a course of proceeding that was not commendable on a question of this grave importance, and that it ought to be discussed if any member of the House desired to discuss it. I do not know that any member does desire to discuss it. But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in regard to the remarks of my colleague, that, with his usual facility for misunderstanding the remarks which I make, he was entirely mistaken if he supposed that I suggested that we were binding the American people. I spoke of the wisdom in my opinion of the American people undertaking to bind themselves or their successors upon such a point. And, sir, I would like to ask where the evidence that my colleague has of this strong desire of the American people to bind themselves is found? Are there petitions on your table, and, sir, have any of us been charged with petitions or any urgency for a constitutional amendment like this? It may be so, but I am not aware of it. None have come to me from my district; whether they have come to my colleague from his district he knows. Is it from these same newspapers to which my colleague so frequently adverts that he derives his information? On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I am willing to trust the American people on all occasions. I believe that there is not half so much danger of corruption in the election of a President as there is in the election of a great many officers inferior in dignity to him which are the subject of personal ambition and desire. The President of the United States is elected by a great wave of public sentiment. The people are always aroused on that occasion, and manifest their will. And why the people of to-day should undertake by constitutional restriction to prevent the people of this country at any future day from expressing their choice of a Chief Magistrate, under the then existing public exigencies, I cannot imagine.

Now, sir, what is the duty of this House? When my colleague says that we prevent the people, whom he supposes to have this desire, from passing on this question through their Legislatures, and voting on such an amendment, I say to him that we are the representatives of the American people here to-day, and our voice is to express what we believe to be their interest and their desire. It is therefore for us to say—no man has a right to say that in giving his vote to send out a constitutional amendment to the people he is willing to send out any amendment that anybody might offer; but his right is to give his vote whether he thinks an amendment is important on this subject, so that it ought to be brought before the people. I have not for one come to the conclusion that it is; and I propose to act in behalf of the people who sent me here, by giving them the benefit of my best judgment and opinion so long as I remain here. I have no desire to take time in the discussion of this matter, and I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] whatever parliamentary rights remain to me.

Mr. POTTER rose.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to offer the amendment which I suggested some moments ago in relation to the expression in the first part of the resolution?

Mr. POTTER. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. KASSON. In line 9 I move to strike out the word "next" and to insert in line 10, after the word "States," the words "next following the ratification of this article."

Will the gentleman also allow me to say that I desire to test the sense of the House, with his permission, upon adding these words to the resolution: "within six years from the expiration of his previous term." I desire to see if it is the sense of the House to confer upon the people the right to elect the same person after the intervention of one term.

Mr. POTTER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has yielded to me the residue of his time. I desire to know how much time remains?

The SPEAKER. Nearly forty minutes.

Mr. POTTER. You will observe that when the gentleman rose I yielded to him once in order to allow him to speak. He now yields to me, and I yield five minutes of my time to my colleage, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS.]

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to no man on this floor in my confidence in the American people. This is not a question of trust in the people, as of course it in no way relates to our present Executive. It is a question whether or not a great principle had better be settled in time of calm; whether or not a great principle had better be laid down independently of personal considerations.

And it does seem to me that it is well for the American Congress to consider whether the Republic can afford to elect its Chief Magistrate twice, thrice, continuously, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR.] As I read history, republics are overthrown by the plea of necessity and in times of great excitement. And I desire that in cold blood the American people shall have the opportunity to say whether or not they are willing in any emergency to re-elect a President for the third time. As I read history, dangers to republics come not as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] suggests from below, but always from above. Always the pretense is that the country needs a strong man, always the pretense is that there is disturbance somewhere, that there is need of an army and a military chieftain. Dictators come through the plea of necessity. Tell me one republic that has ever been overthrown in any way other than that. Now, I want the American people to have at least the opportunity to see how they read history, and whether they do not believe that in that way lies murder to the Republic.

For one, I desire now to say, that even in the case which the gentleman from Massachusetts has suggested, the re-election of Mr. Lincoln, it would have been better to have nominated and elected another rather than to have established the principle of a continuous Executive. For one, I am willing to say here that I cannot conceive the contingency in which I would be willing to vote for a continuous Executive in this Republic. And I ask gentlemen upon this side of the House to consider whether or not they will now be put upon the record as willing to invite a contingency in the future when we shall be called upon to meet the alternative of disturbance and excitement or a continuous Executive, of a strong man in a strong Government? My faith is not in strong men; my faith is in the American people.

Constitutions are made in times of deliberation, if they are to be good constitutions. I want the American people to have the privilege of saying what their constitution shall be. And I deem that as infinitely more important than the privilege at any time of being able to call upon any man, however strong or however great. All constitutions are limitations upon the action of the people. This provision is no more open to that objection as made by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] than any other clause. Written constitutions are designed to establish principles, and these restrict the passions of the hour. Their purpose is to set up defenses and barriers. Surely this is a case where constitutional defenses ought to be erected. I think it is essential to the Republic that an amendment like this shall be put into the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. POTTER] to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. POTTER. I will do so.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I desire first to state that this morning was the first that I had ever heard of this joint resolution. Not understanding it, not having been present when it was considered in committee, not knowing it was to be introduced here, and not hearing it read, I made no objection at the time.

I cannot understand the arguments made by some gentlemen on this side of the House in favor of this joint resolution, nor can I quite understand some of the objections made against it. Members talk as though, if this amendment was not adopted, some great outrage would be committed in the future; as though the people were not as capable as members here to determine in the future who shall be President; as though we could determine to-day who shall or shall not be eligible to that office better than those who may come after us.

In my examination of this subject, and with the thought I have been able to bestow upon it, I can find no reason sufficient to justify me in saying that the American people shall set up a statute so high that it cannot be readily reached; that we shall say to the people in the future, "You shall elect only this or that man," as if we dreaded lest some man should be elected whom we might not be willing to have elected. Members have addressed themselves to the subject here on the idea that there is a call for this proposition from the people. Now that I deny. I have heard no clamor for it; there is none that has reached my ears to justify the assertion here at least that it is a thing demanded by the American people.

As a proposition standing by itself, the portion extending the term of office of President to six years might be well. But I am willing for one to trust myself in the vote which I may deposit for the next presidential candidate, and I am willing that those who follow me may trust themselves for all time. This attempt to limit the right of the people in that regard is but an evidence of a lack of confidence which gentlemen have in those who may follow them, and an assertion of their superior ability to determine who shall hereafter serve as President in this country.

Having said this, I had proposed to move to lay this joint resolution upon the table. I have stated my objections to it and the reason why at this moment I am opposed to it. I do not desire to cut off debate; I do not know that it is the wish of the House to so dispose of this matter. But in order to test the sense of the House, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] will allow me, I will make the motion to lay this joint resolution on the table.

Several MEMBERS. No! No!

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I will withdraw the motion if there is a desire to debate the resolution further.

Mr. POTTER. I will yield to allow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] to make that motion.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Then I move that this resolution be laid on the table.

The question was taken upon the motion to lay on the table; and upon a division there were—ayes 71, noes 74.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. BECK, Mr. HOLMAN, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 98, nays 139, not voting 51; as follows:

Wilson, and Woodworth—51.

So the joint resolution was not laid on the table.

Mr. POLAND. I move that this resolution be recommitted to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. POLAND. Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. TREMAIN. Will not my colleague [Mr. POTTER] consent that the taking of the vote (which if taken now must occupy so much of the time we want to give to other reports) shall be postponed for a week?

Mr. POTTER. That will be entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. DAWES. I hope that it will not be postponed, for a mere postponement for a week, without making it a special order, would jeopardize any action upon it.

Mr. TREMAIN. Then fix it as a special order, with the understanding that the question shall be taken without debate.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I object.

Mr. TREMAIN. I hope the gentleman will not object. We want the balance of to-day for other business of our committee.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It is best not to amend the Constitution unless we can take the necessary time to do it.

Mr. TREMAIN. That is just what I am asking.

Mr. ELDREDGE. And that is precisely what I want.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] proposes that this question be postponed for one week, and that the vote be then taken without debate. The Chair desires to suggest that inasmuch as this resolution requires a two-thirds vote for its adoption, it might just as well come up on Monday afternoon, upon a motion to suspend the rules, as to assign an hour on some other day for taking the question without debate. Nothing will be gained by asking unanimous consent for the latter arrangement.

Mr. TREMAIN. I am willing that the proposition be postponed, and that if anybody desires to debate it when it comes up again, it should be debated.

Mr. LAWRENCE. We had better have some debate.

Mr. TREMAIN. Say one hour's debate.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Say two hours' debate.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Is it in order to move to recommit the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] yields.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I move that the resolution be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TREMAIN. The gentleman cannot take me off the floor.

Mr. WILBER. I think that the resolution ought to be recommitted, and that we should go on with other business. It is time we did some business.

Mr. POTTER. We must either vote now or on some other day, and if we cannot agree to another day, let us vote now.

Mr. TREMAIN. Does it require two-thirds to fix another day for the taking of the vote?

The SPEAKER. The House is competent by a majority vote to postpone the resolution and take the risk of reaching it. It is not competent to assign this measure to a particular day, exclusive of all other orders, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. TREMAIN. Then I move to postpone it for one week from to-day at one o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had recognized the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WARD,] which was to recommit the bill; but the gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] moves to postpone until one week from to-day, which motion takes precedence.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to inquire of the Chair whether, if we agree to the motion to postpone, that will certainly bring this measure to a vote on this day week?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the chances are about one in a thousand that it may do so.

Mr. DAWES. I hope, then, the House will understand that agreeing to a motion to postpone to a day certain, without making a special assignment for that day, will give the measure only one chance in a thousand of coming up.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, and Mr. LAWRENCE. Make it a special order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We all agree to that.

The SPEAKER. To make it a special order requires unanimous consent.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] what would be gained by recommitting the resolution?

Mr. CESSNA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is there any motion pending except the motion to postpone? Is the motion to recommit pending?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CESSNA. If I should call the previous question and it should be sustained by a majority of the House, will it operate upon the motion to postpone and also the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. No, sir; the previous question will exhaust itself upon the motion to postpone.

Mr. TREMAIN. In view of the statement of the Chair, I withdraw the motion to postpone.

Mr. CESSNA. I ask the previous question on the motion to recommit and on the joint resolution. We may as well vote now. We all know what we are going to do, and there is no use of wasting another day upon the subject.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] inquired of the Chair a few moments ago what were the chances of this measure being reached if it should be postponed for one week.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair answered about one in a thousand.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I would like the Chair to inform the House what are its chances now.

The SPEAKER. That is a question of voting, which it is for the House to determine.

Mr. CESSNA. I beg to answer the gentleman. The chances are that we shall dispose of the measure one way or another.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question being taken on the motion to recommit, there were—ayes 85, noes 79.

The yeas and nays were demanded, and were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 109, nays 123, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Averill, Barber, Barrere, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Smith, Snyder, Starkweather, Stowell, Sypher, Walls, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Ephraim K. Wilson, and Woodworth—56.

So the House refused to recommit to the Judiciary Committee.

During the vote,

Mr. ORTH stated that his colleague, Mr. SAYLER, was absent on account of illness in his family.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachussetts. That was agreed to.

Mr. POTTER. I only agreed to admit one amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "next" and insert in line 10, after the word "States," the words "next following the ratification of this article."

Mr. POTTER. I agreed to that amendment, and it was adopted.

Mr. KASSON. Now read the other amendment I proposed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the resolution "within six years from the expiration of his previous term of office;" so it will read:

From and after the election for President of the United States next following the ratification of this article the President shall hold his office during the term of six years, and, together with the Vice-President chosen for the same term, be elected in the manner as now provided or may hereafter be provided; but neither the President nor Vice-President, when the office of President is devolved upon him, shall be eligible for re-election as President.

Mr. POTTER. I did not allow that amendment to come in.

Mr. FORT. Will the gentleman yield to me to move an amendment?

Mr. CESSNA. I object to any more debate or any further amendment.

Mr. FORT. I wish to strike out six and insert four years.

Mr. CESSNA. I object to anybody further debating the question or submitting any amendment.

The question then recurred on ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 72.

Mr. MAYNARD. Two-thirds have not voted in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. Two-thirds are not required except on the passage.

So the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

Mr. FORT. Is the resolution engrossed?

The SPEAKER. It is not, but it has been ordered to be read a third time, and the gentleman's point comes too late.

Mr. CESSNA. I demand the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. POTTER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Constitution requires on this question a two-thirds vote to pass the resolution.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 134, nays 104, not voting 50; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Beck, Begole, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Buffinton, Bundy, Caldwell, Cannon, Cessna, Chittenden, John B. Robinson, Henry B. Sayler, Sheldon, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Stowell, Swann, Sypher, Walls, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Ephraim K. Wilson, and Woodworth—50.

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the joint resolution was not passed.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. GUNCKEL stated that his colleague, Mr. DANFORD, of Ohio, was detained at his room by sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. BECK. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no; let us finish our reports.

Mr. BECK. Very well. I withdraw the motion.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am also instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4041) to establish the judicial district of Oklahoma. As the bill establishes a new court, it is open to the point of order, and it may go to the Committee of the Whole without being read.

Mr. SHANKS. I wish to offer an amendment to that bill.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SOUTHERN IOWA UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT.

Mr. POTTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with the recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3906) providing for holding the terms of the United States district court for the southern district of Iowa at Burlington, in said division; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT JUDGE OF VERMONT.

Mr. POTTER also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3920) for the relief of the district judge of Vermont.

The bill was read. The preamble recites that the present incumbent of the office of district judge for the district of Vermont is incapacitated by sickness and paralysis from performing the duties of his office, which incapacity is believed to be permanent. The bill therefore provides that the resignation of the district judge for the district of Vermont being tendered and accepted by the President of the United states, the salary now received by said judge shall be continued to him during his natural life, payable in the same manner and form as if he actually performed the duties of his office.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should desire to hear some explanation of the occasion for this bill, but meanwhile do not waive the point of order.

Mr. POTTER. I think nobody will insist on the point of order on this bill. The law now allows the Federal judges who reach the age of seventy years, and who have served ten years, to retire from their duties, retaining their salaries. In this case Judge Smalley has not quite reached the age of seventy years; I believe he is about sixty-seven years of age. He has been in the judicial service for seventeen or eighteen years continuously. He has been afflicted by an incurable disease, and is absolutely paralyzed and entirely unable to discharge the duties of his office. The interests of the public business require some other person to be put in his place to discharge those duties. This is one of those cases coming within the spirit of the statute relating to judges over seventy years of age, and the relief it affords ought to be extended to him also. I may state further that he is a man utterly without means, having failed, in consequence of his devotion to the duties of his office, to acquire any.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must insist on the point of order. I am opposed to this whole civil pension list. It is against the genius of our institutions.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not insist on the point of order. Here is a case in which you cannot compel this judge to resign, and unless this is done he will not resign, but will hold on to the office, and the public business will suffer in consequence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that this bill takes money from the Treasury of the United States not now authorized by law.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I hope my colleague will withdraw the point of order in the interest of the public service, if for no other reason.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

OVERCHARGE OF TONNAGE AND IMPORT DUTIES.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4451) to provide judicial remedies for overcharge of duties on tonnage and imports.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. KASSON. It may save time to make the point of order on this bill before the reading is completed. There is a provision in it to pay money out of the Treasury.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There is no provision for paying money out of the Treasury the payment of which is not now authorized by law. Its object is only to provide judicial remedies to determine how much that sum shall be; that is all.

Mr. MERRIAM. If in order I would move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. It seems to me that that is the proper place where it should be considered.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This has nothing to do with the raising of revenue. I asked two or three gentlemen on the Committee on Ways and Means to examine if it did, and they came to the conclusion that it did not. The bill only provides judicial remedies—a method of ascertaining the rights of importers through the court. A report on this subject has been printed, (No. 95,) and if gentlemen would do their duty to their constituents and study the report they would know much more about it.

Mr. MERRIAM. They would do nothing else if they read all the reports.

Mr. DAWES. I would suggest that the bill might be referrred to the Committee on Ways and Means with power to report it back at any time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If the bill can be committed to the Committee on Ways and Means with authority to that committee to report it back at any time, I have no objection.

Mr. DAWES. I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill. The purport of it I think to be to secure a very desirable end, but still it is a change in the mode of collecting the revenue, and I think the Committee on Ways and Means ought to have the privilege of examining it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] made a point of order on the bill.

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw the point of order if the bill can be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will agree to that reference with great pleasure if the committee can have leave to report it back at any time.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the House, then, to let it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, with the privilege of reporting it back at any time; and if there be nothing objectionable in it, we will surrender it, when reported back, to the custody of my colleague from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask leave that it be reported back for consideration in the House?

Mr. DAWES. For consideration in the House.

No objection was made; and the bill was referredto the Committee on Ways and Means, with leave to report it back at any time for consideration in the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the order was made; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no; let us do a little public business. We have been fooling here all afternoon.

SESSION FOR DEBATE.

Mr. DAWES. Before the House adjourns I wish to say that several gentlemen have asked me to request of the House that they may have the privilege of coming up and making speeches to-night.

Mr. SPEER. O, no; I object.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We are all coming here to make speeches to-night.

Mr. DAWES. On their behalf I ask that they may have the privilege of coming here to-morrow night and making speeches in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Certainly it does.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. That cannot be granted.

WRITS OF ERROR IN CRIMINAL CAUSES.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (S. No. 935) to provide for writs of error in certain criminal causes.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that on the trial of any criminal cause in any circuit or district court of the United States, or in any court of any Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia, the defendant or defendants shall be entitled to a bill of exceptions, which may be settled on the trial or within ten days thereafter, and the same shall be signed by the presiding judge or justice of such court, and shall be deemed to be a part of the record in such cause.

The second section provides that in any criminal cause in any circuit or district court of the United States in which any defendant or defendants shall be sentenced to death, the court shall fix a day, not less than thirty nor more than ninety days after such sentence shall be pronounced, for the said sentence to be carried into execution; and any defendant or defendants sentenced to death as aforesaid may remove said cause, by writ of error, to the Supreme Court of the United States, as matter of right, and without giving bond or security; said writ to be issued and served as in civil causes; and after the service of such writ the execution of said sentence shall be stayed, and the Supreme Court shall proceed to hear and determine said writ of error according to law; and if the day fixed by the sentence in the court below shall have passed before the Supreme Court shall render judgment on said writ of error, and the judgment in the court below shall be affirmed, the Supreme Court shall fix the day, not less than thirty nor more than ninety days after such affirmance, when said sentence shall be carried into execution, and issue a warrant to the proper officer therefor.

The third section provides that in every criminal cause tried in any court of any Territory of the United States or of the District of Columbia, in which any defendant or defendants shall be sentenced to death, the court shall fix a day, not less than thirty nor more than ninety days after such sentence shall be pronounced, for the said sentence to be carried into execution; and any defendant or defendants sentenced to death as aforesaid may remove said cause by writ of error to the supreme court of the said Territory or the District of Columbia, as the case may be, as matter of right; and after said writ of error shall be served, all proceedings in said judgment in the court below shall be stayed, and said supreme court shall proceed to hear and determine said writ of error according to law; and if said supreme court shall affirm said judgment, and the day fixed by the court below for the execution of said sentence shall have passed before said judgment of affirmance shall be rendered, said supreme court shall fix a day not less than thirty nor more than ninety days after such affirmance, upon which said sentence shall be executed; and after such affirmance said defendant or defendants may, by writ of error, and as matter of right, and without giving any bond or security, remove said cause to the Supreme Court of the United States, said writ to be issued and served as in civil causes; and after the service of said writ the execution of said sentence shall be stayed, and the Supreme Court of the United States shall proceed to hear and determine said writ of error according to law; and if the said judgment shall be affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the day fixed by the said supreme court of such Territory or of the District of Columbia, as the case may be, shall have passed before such affirmance in the Supreme Court of the United States, the last-named court shall fix a day, not less than thirty nor more than ninety days after such affirmance by said court, for the said sentence to be carried into execution, and shall issue a warrant to the proper officer therefor.

The fourth section provides that in all criminal prosecutions, penal actions, or proceedings to enforce a penalty prescribed by law in any circuit or district court of the United States, in which any defendant or defendants shall be sentenced to imprisonment for one year or upward or to a fine of $1,000 or upward; or in which there shall be a recovery for $2,000 or upward; or in any criminal prosecution, penal action, or proceeding to enforce a penalty prescribed by law in any court of any Territory of the United States or of the District of Columbia, in which any defendant or defendants shall be sentenced to imprisonment for one year or upward or to a fine of $1,000 or upward, or in which there shall be a recovery for $1,000 or upward, and the said judgment, sentence, or recovery shall be affirmed by the supreme court of such Territory or the District of Columbia, as the case may be, in which criminal prosecution, action, or proceeding the said defendant or defendants set up or relied upon the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made or which shall be made under their authority, in defense, the defendant or defendants therein may apply to any justice of the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of error to remove such prosecution, action, or proceeding to the Supreme Court of the United States within one year from the time when final judgment was entered therein by said circuit or district court, or by the supreme court of said Territory or of the District of Columbia, as the case may be; and if the justice so applied to shall be satisfied that such defense was interposed in good faith, or that the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States were fairly involved in the said judgment, and that the said defendant or defendants so applying has or have been substantially prejudiced by said judgment, he shall allow a writ of error; and after service thereof, as in civil causes, all proceedings on such judgment shall be stayed, and the Supreme Court of the United States shall proceed to hear and determine said writ of error according to law.

The fifth section provides that at the time said writ of error shall be allowed in the cases mentioned in the next preceding section, or at any time thereafter, the Supreme Court of the United States, or any justice thereof, may admit the said defendant or defendants to bail, in such sum as shall appear to be just, to answer and abide by such judgment therein; and upon giving such new bail, all bail required prior to granting said writ of error shall be discharged; or if said defendant or defendants be in actual custody, he or they shall be discharged upon giving such new bail; but if the defendant or defendants are at large on bail when said writ of error shall be allowed, said bail shall not be discharged by the allowance of said writ.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 6. That writs of error issued to and allowed as hereinbefore provided shall be entered upon the docket of the Supreme Court forthwith, and the argument of such cases and cases of habeas corpus shall have precedence of all other cases in said court.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will state that this bill was very carefully considered by the Senate and is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, being first upon the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that the title of the bill be amended by adding to it the following:

For hearing therein and in cases of habeas corpus.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R.

No. 4099) to divide the State of Michigan into three judicial districts, and to establish the northern district of Michigan.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That bill is liable to the point of order, and must be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY OF VIRGINIA.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4438) for the relief of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company of Virginia; and the same was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

NEW IDRIA MINING COMPANY.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have been instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a preamble and resolutions, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the title to the tract of land situated in the counties of Monterey and Fresno, California, known as the Rancho Panoche Grande, and described as follows, northerly, by the lands of Don Julian Ursua; southerly, by the Serralne or Santa Anna River; easterly, by the valley of Tulares; and westerly, by the lands of Don Francisco Arias, is in dispute; and whereas it is alleged that the New Idria Quicksilver Mining Company is in the illegal and wrongful possession of a large part thereof; and whereas the said wrongful possession is alleged to have existed for some seventeen years; and whereas it is also alleged that the same New Idria Mining Company has taken from said land some $7,000,000, and that they are now and for the past year believed to have taken therefrom about $100,000 per month; and whereas, if not the property of any individual claimant, it is the property of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and is hereby, requested to immediately employ special counsel, whose duty it shall be to institute legal proceedings in the name of the Government of the United States against the said New Idria Mining Company in the circuit court of the United States for California to restrain the further waste of the property, and for the appointment of a receiver and the recovery of the possession thereof, and also for the recovery of the $7,000,000 in gold alleged to have been illegally and wrongfully taken therefrom by the said New Idria Company, and such other action as the Commissioner may deem proper.

SEC. 2. That all persons who may have claim of title to the aforesaid property shall be permitted to appear and be heard by counsel in the aforesaid proceedings in establishing their title thereto.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed and instructed to withhold the issuing of any patent, and to allow no proceedings in his Department for the purpose of issuing patents to the said New Idria Mining Company on their alleged claim; and also that no proceedings be taken in the said Department of the Interior to be had on the quicksilver-mining claims now on file in the General Land Office, and known as the "Cerro Bonita," "Andy Johnson," "Fourth of July," and "Boston," until the legal proceedings heretofore referred to shall have been finally determined.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This resolution is for the purpose of directing the proper officer of the Government, having charge of the public lands, to determine the title of the United States in the valuable quicksilver mines known as the New Idria Company mines, or sometimes as the McGarrahan claim.

Mr. KASSON. Is this a joint resolution or a House resolution? If it is a House resolution, can we give it the effect of law?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is quite possible for one House by resolution, to direct one of the heads of Departments.

Mr. KASSON. This provides for legal proceedings.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. One House can direct any head of Department to do that which it is his duty to do.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to reserve the point of order on this resolution. I think it should be a joint resolution.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have no objection to making it a joint resolution, if necessary.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I raise the point of order that this necessarily requires the expenditure of money, and should be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That point is too late.

The SPEAKER. This resolution as presented is simply a House resolution.

Mr. KASSON. So I thought.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And so I said. If the official will not obey the order of the House, then it is for the House to take care of its own rights and privileges.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HOUGHTON] makes the point of order that this is a proposition to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to do sundry and divers things which will involve the expenditure of money. If it were a joint resolution, the point would be pertinent. But the Chair cannot believe that, being a House resolution, it will have any force at all, and therefore does not rule upon the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is a direction to the Commissioner of the General Land Office to do his duty.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will he not do his duty without this?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, because he is waiting for some action of the House, or of somebody, to set him going; that is the trouble. I call the previous question, unless some gentleman desires to do something more than to quarrel about forms.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman. Does not this resolution awaken again into life and bring up for a rehearing the McGarrahan claim, on which this House, after a very long debate, pronounced a few years ago in the most decisive manner? Many members of the House believed that the McGarrahan claim was a fraud of about as marked a character as any that ever had been before the House. Of course there was a difference of opinion on that subject, but the majority of the House took that view.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. To that I answer, in the first place, that the House has over and over again sustained the McGarrahan claim, and my friend is utterly mistaken in that. Secondly, this resolution does not revive the claim of anybody, except the claim of that much-suffering individual, the United States. The United States has here four, or five, or eight, or ten, or twelve, or fifteen million dollars—nobody knows how much—of quicksilver, and a company has intruded upon it, and has been using it day by day, at the rate of a million or two of dollars a year, for the last seventeen years. And the majority of the persons composing that company are by law excluded from any mining rights because they reside out of the country—because they are foreigners.

Now, all that we ask by this resolution—and I believe the committee are unanimous in reporting it—is that the Secretary of the Interior shall have admonition from the House that he should take steps to vindicate the title of the United States against whoever may oppose it, fraudulently or otherwise; and if the Secretary of the Interior will not be admonished in this way, there will be found, I have no doubt, a way by which to admonish him.

Mr. GARFIELD. If I were the Secretary of the Interior I would be admonished by the law only.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. You would not be Secretary of the Interior very long if you did not respect the admonitions of this House.

Mr. GARFIELD. The House cannot make any man Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But it unmakes a great many.

Mr. KASSON. This resolution was offered originally as a joint resolution, being divided into sections. It is now presented, I believe, explicitly as a House resolution,

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. KASSON. It reads, "Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled;" and then it goes on with various enactments in the form of sections. It appears therefore that it was originally intended to be passed in the form in which the House has always acted upon matters of this kind. I presume therefore that in its present form the gentleman cannot expect the House to pass it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me; that is exactly what I do expect. Are not we "assembled in Congress?" If not, where are we assembled? I thought we were here in Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. Nothing but the two Houses can be "in Congress assembled," I believe. This House is no doubt a very important body; but it is not Congress.

Mr. HOUGHTON. This resolution ought not to pass in any form. There is litigation now pending before the courts of the country in relation to this property. Two private parties are asserting their rights to it. This resolution seems to be intended to favor one of those parties who for years has been attempting to assert a fraudulent claim to this property—a claim which has been rejected and pronounced a fraud by the courts of the country. It seems to me that the purpose of this resolution is simply to help out that man in his attempt to possess himself of this property. I think it ought not to pass; and I know something of the subject.

A MEMBER. Are you a stockholder in the New Idria Mining Company?

Mr. HOUGHTON. No, sir; I have no stock in that company or any other mining company.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I answer, in the first place, that this resolution does not favor anybody but the United States. It directs suit to be brought to determine the title, and provides that the United States shall be properly represented in that suit. This company are now holding some seven or eight thousand acres of land; and the only title under heaven that they claim to this land is under the mining laws of the country, under which they cannot possibly hold more than three thousand square feet. Yet they have spread themselves all over that country; and they have been able thus far, I am sorry to say, to control action everywhere. The object of this resolution now is simply to direct the proper officers of the United States to vindicate the title of the United States.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I will ask my colleague whether he thinks that the House of Representatives should undertake executive duties?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Where the executive officers of the Government fail to do any part of their duty, it may be the province of Congress to make laws requiring the proper performance of such duty; but I have yet to learn that the House of Representatives has any right, except where there is some interference with its own action, to give any direction to an executive officer.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. To that I answer that the House of Representatives has a right by resolve to make its wishes and directions known to any executive officer whatever; and in doing this we are not undertaking to perform executive duties. This resolution does not require any executive officer to do anything but——

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Suppose the Senate should pass a resolution instructing this executive officer to do the contrary?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me; I will answer that. That is exactly what we did in a former House. The Secretary of the Interior was trying to issue patents to this very New Idria Mining Company, and the House of Representatives passed a resolution asking him to do nothing in the matter until we had legislated upon the subject and until certain acts were done. This very resolution called upon the Secretary not to give up the public domain until the question had been tried in court. It is the hardest thing in the world for "Uncle Sam" to keep any property.

Mr. GARFIELD. I remember very distinctly when the Secretary of the Interior to whom the gentleman refers performed his duty by ordering a record made declaring that a certain patent had not issued, had not been completed, had not been signed, although its form had been prepared. An attempt was made in this House to condemn him for doing that duty and to require him to undo the mere recording work he had ordered to be done in his office. That was attempted in the name and on behalf of William McGarrahan—as fraudulent a claimant as ever appeared before this House. But the Secretary of the Interior, nevertheless, did his duty; he did make the record as I have stated. And now, with these matters in controversy before the courts, with the executive officers of the country waiting for the decrees of the courts, it is proposed that the House—not Congress—shall come in and use its influence to require the Secretary of the Interior to do something that the law either already requires him to do or does not require him to do. Now, if the law does not require him to do it, and the gentleman from Massachusetts wants to make a new law on the subject, let him introduce a bill and ask the House to pass it. If the laws at present require this to be done, then why should we undertake to intermeddle by resolution between the law and the duty of the Secretary of the Interior?

I remember to have defended to the best of my ability the then Secretary of the Interior against the attempt to interfere between him and his duties; and I had supposed that the action of Congress at that time had put a quietus upon this attempt to carry through the Interior Department something in the interest of some particular party. I cannot see any pertinency in a mere resolution of this nondescript sort. If the object is to change the law of the land, let the proposition be offered as such, and let us debate it as such.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If this resolution has no force, then it cannot do any harm; and why does the gentleman fight it so hard?

Mr. GARFIELD. Because it is impertinent to pass a resolution on a matter of this sort.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I think you are mistaken in that.

Mr. GARFIELD. And because in a covert way, as it seems to me, this resolution attempts to revive the exploded claim of McGarrahan to a piece of property to which I do not believe he ever had the slightest right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This is not the revival of a claim at all. The resolution simply provides for enforcing the claim of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I understand that I still have the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Did not the Speaker recognize me?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will yield to the gentleman for a few moments.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I do not wish to occupy the floor as yielded to me by the gentleman. The moment the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] took his seat I was recognized, and I have the floor according to the Speaker's decision.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, when did I lose the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the gentleman surrendered the floor to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I did not. I could not stop him from speaking, though I tried two or three times. I have not yielded the floor. I am advocating this resolution. I desire now to answer further the gentleman from Ohio.

I say that during eight years I have stood here asking over and over again that the title of the United States to this land should be maintained. I have never asked anything else. This much is due to the United States. But the moment anybody asks anything on behalf of the United States there are men here who spring to their feet with the utmost alacrity to resist it. This company has been taking $2,000,000 a year out of these mines; and, in the language of my colleague, [Mr. E. R. HOAR,] there is always great delicacy where there is a great amount of money involved.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Is there any reason why there should be any discrimination made against these parties who are working quicksilver mines that is not made against those who are working mines of gold and silver? Now, it is very important to all the silver-mining interests of the Pacific coast that this quicksilver should be extracted. It is a material necessary for the working of those mines. The price of the article is very high in the market now; and the stopping of these mines will only have a tendency to still further increase the price.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Nobody desires to stop them.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he does not know it to be a fact that the persons now working and who have been for years working this quicksilver mine have an application pending before the proper Department of this Government to acquire title to the property under existing laws?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Is not that a fact?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is a fact; and they got through this House (one of the Senators from California coming over here to urge the measure) a bill, of which I have a copy on my desk, allowing foreigners to do in regard to quicksilver mines what they cannot do in regard to any other mines.

I say again there is no intention to stop the working of these mines. The intention is to stop this immense revenue from going to private parties and to put it into the hands of the Government. And when I see men peddling about the question of a clerk here or a clerk there and cutting off some black woman's salary, and then coming in and insisting at the same time the United States should be robbed year after year of millions of dollars, I do not understand their consistency.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman alludes to me, he will remember the old fight on the McGarrahan claim, and understand why I defend now the Secretary of the Interior from being assaulted as one was assaulted before.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No one is assaulting the Secretary of the Interior. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Certainly; how long do you want?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Two or three minutes—say three minutes.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. All right.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was originally offered as a joint resolution, and if it be passed at all should be passed as a joint resolution. I do not believe it is proper, whatever may be strictly technical or legal in the matter, for this House "in Congress assembled," as the resolution reads, to instruct any one of the Department officers in his executive duties. In the next place, whether either House of Congress has any authority whatever to instruct an executive officer of this character to do or not to do a particular thing, I wish to say that in this very case at one time the Attorney-General of the United States (who does not happen to sit far from me) gave an opinion that one House of Congress could not instruct or command him one way or the other in the performance of a strictly executive duty. I knew nothing of this matter. I had forgotten McGarrahan was here now in litigation with the New Idria Company; but as soon as the Clerk began to read the resolution it struck me as suspicious. I do not say it appeared to me as fraudulent upon its face, but that there was something which needed explanation, because it begins in the preamble to decide what is in question in the case, and talks of "the illegal and wrongful possession of that property," "which has existed for seventeen years," and "that $7,000,000 is believed to have been taken therefrom." I believe this is substantially in the interest of private persons—more for their interest than for the interest of the Government. I so believe because McGarrahan has been pushing and advocating it. I say it needs explanation why this was offered originally as a joint resolution and now comes back here with the "joint" crossed off with ink and is attempted to be passed as a simple resolution, and only by this House. Before I vote on the question I wish to know all about it.

Mr. McCRARY. Mr. Speaker, as I offered the original resolution, I desire to say a word about it. The gentleman from Connecticut is mistaken in supposing it was originally a joint resolution. It seems to have been printed as such, but it was not originally drawn with that view.

I have no doubt any Secretary will heed the request of the House of Representatives upon a matter of this kind.

I wish to say further that, during nearly six years I have been in this House, the controversy between McGarrahan and the New Idria Mining Company has been going on in the two Houses of Congress, and gentlemen have urged upon the one side the rights of one private claimant and on the other the rights of another. I have learned in the course of the controversy that some of the best lawyers in the Union believe the title to that very valuable property resides in the United States. Yet nobody has, until this day, brought in any bill or resolution to test the rights of the United States to that property. That is the object of that resolution. I believe, sir, it is the duty of the proper Department to test that without any action by either House of Congress, but I suppose it is perfectly proper for us to request it to be done; for if this vast property belongs to the United States, it is high time the United States should derive some revenue from it, because vast sums of money are being taken from these mines every month.

I believe nobody has ever claimed the New Idria Mining Company has any title at all. A good many people believe the title is in McGarrahan, and honestly think so, and that these other parties are mere squatters seeking, it is true, to perfect their claim to enter these mines under some law of the United States. But I believe under the law it cannot be claimed any mining company can enter more than three thousand feet of mining lands. If, I say again, this property belongs to the United States, it is high time the proper authority should institute the proper proceedings in the courts of the country where such questions should be settled to have the question settled. If it belongs to any private claimant, as a matter of course that private claimant should be heard in the course of the litigation. But let it go out of Congress; let it go into the courts of the country to be settled according to law, and let us know who is the owner of these lands.

Mr. KASSON. Will my colleague allow me to call his attention to section 2, which provides that all persons who may have claim of title to the aforesaid property shall be permitted to appear and be heard by the counsel in the aforesaid proceedings in establishing their title thereto. It also provides for other proceedings. I ask my colleague if he supposes that will be effected simply as a House resolution regulating the rights of parties in courts, or whether it is not indispensable to make it a joint resolution?

Mr. McCRARY. I will answer my colleague. It will not be effected as a rule for the proceeding in court. The law makes all the provision that is necessary for that purpose. When a chancery proceeding is instituted, all the parties would have a right, independent of any legislation, to appear and assert their claims; all the parties can be heard, the Government as well as private claimants.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. In connection with what the gentleman from Iowa has stated, I wish to offer another consideration. It is stated by the gentleman from Ohio that there are cases now pending, and the gentleman from California [Mr. HOUGHTON] also says that there are cases now pending wherein this matter is being litigated between private individuals; but none of these gentlemen have ventured to say here that there is anything being done by any officer of this Government to protect the interest of the United States in this valuable property, or that there is any case now pending for that purpose. If these cases are pending, it may perchance be the fact that the United States might come forward and ask to be made a party to these proceedings. Is there any officer of this Government who is stepping forward to have the Government made a party to these proceedings for the purpose of protecting its interest? No, sir. And that these things are not being done by the officers of this Government is one of the very best reasons why this House should say to these gentlemen that they ought to be doing their duty in the premises.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now call the previous question.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to make an inquiry of my colleague.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] to yield to me for a moment.

Several MEMBERS called for the regular order.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I wish to say a word more. There is nothing unusual in this resolution. I remember very well in the last Congress——

Mr. HALE, of New York. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. MAYNARD. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is progressing strictly according to the rules.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Has not the motion to adjourn been made, and is not that motion now pending?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not wish to press the motion to adjourn against other reports which the committee may desire to make.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] misapprehended the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON.] The gentleman from Indiana has not yielded the floor and is entitled to proceed.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I was simply going to add, that there is nothing unusual in this resolution, if I may so characterize it, of instruction to the Department of the Interior to proceed in this matter. Why, sir, I remember very well that in the Forty-second Congress the question arose here with reference to the issuance of patents to large quantities of land as between certain contending railroad companies—the chairman and other gentlemen of the committee will remember about it—and there was a resolution of instruction to the Secretary of the Interior. And I remember that in the last Congress also there were instructions given by this House to the Attorney-General of the United States to institute proceedings against the Pacific Railroad Companies, for the purpose of recovering interest due to the United States; and I further think that my friend from Pennsylvania offered that resolution.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the gentleman allow me to say right there——

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Allow me to proceed. And if this great interest does rest in the United States, notwithstanding what was stated by the gentleman from California, [Mr. HOUGHTON,] that quicksilver was dear—if this great interest does rest in the United States, we ought to be taking care of it. That was a most remarkable argument made by my friend from California, that because quicksilver is dear and necessary for the purposes of the mining interests, this New Idria Mining Company ought to have this thing. That is no argument why this Government should not have its interests protected.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I yield for a few minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL. I remember very well that about this question there was a three-cornered contest in this House some years ago, and I took some part in it. I voted against the New Idria Company. I then voted against McGarrahan, and on the third vote I voted in favor of the Government obtaining by every proceeding possible the ownership of this land; and I voted with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] in that respect. Now, if I understand the object of this resolution, it is simply this: That upon one occasion the Attorney-General of the United States has appeared against the Government in behalf of the New Idria Company, and it is therefore indelicate at least that that same officer should now sue for the possession by the Government of this land; and this resolution, in its object and in its scope, simply secures the employment of some other lawyer, who shall appear for the Government and endeavor that the Government shall own this land, as I think they have the right to do.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say that was before Mr. Williams became Attorney-General.

Mr. RANDALL. I am correct. Before Mr. Williams became Attorney-General of the United States he had appeared in this suit against the Government, and therefore there is an indelicacy in the same man in a new capacity appearing on the opposite side. The scope of this resolution is simply to allow the Government every advantage possible in procuring this land which belongs to it.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to inquire if it has that effect?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object to debate, and call the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to do everything to make this Government possess what it owns.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I insist on the previous question.

Mr. KELLOGG. Pending that motion, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER put the question, and announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. PAGE and Mr. HOUGHTON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; only twelve members voting therefor.

Mr. KASSON. I ask now that before the vote the resolution be read.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had put the question on agreeing to the resolution, and it is too late for the resolution to be read.

Mr. KASSON. I misapprehended the vote, supposing it to be upon seconding the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that further debate was not desired, and put the question on the resolution without any formal vote being taken upon the previous question. As the gentleman acted under a misapprehension, the resolution will again be read.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the House adjourns, will not this come up the first thing to-morrow morning as unfinished business?

Several MEMBERS. O, no; do not let us adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the words "in Congress assembled" be stricken out and also the "sections," and that the word "resolved" be substituted.

There was no objection; and the modification was made.

The question was then put upon the resolution; and on a division there were—ayes 98, noes 32; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. HOUGHTON were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 128, noes 5.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is filibustering; he has not voted.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think a majority of the House ought to give up to five members.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. Will a motion for a call of the House be in order?

Mr. ELDREDGE. We shall have to have the yeas and nays, if gentlemen will not vote.

Mr. CESSNA. When the Chair put this question first, the Chair declared that the ayes appeared to have it. Before the determination of the question a call was made for the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the resolution. The Chair asked that all in favor of taking the question by yeas and nays should rise, and the Chair then announced that only twelve gentlemen had risen, and that the yeas and nays were not ordered. That was all done before the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] called for the reading of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. There seems to have been a misapprehension on the part of the House in regard to what that particular vote was. The Chair presumed that no further desire for debate existed, and omitted the form of putting the previous question.

Mr. CESSNA. If the minority refuse to vote, then I shall move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is a quorum in the Hall, and the rules make it the plain duty of members to vote.

Mr. POLAND. I suggest that that rule be read, as some gentlemen do not seem to be aware of its existence.

The SPEAKER. That is the rule, as is well known to members of the House.

Mr. SYPHER. Cannot we send out for soldiers to make members vote?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I rise to make an inquiry. If the House now adjourns, how would it leave this proposition?

The SPEAKER. It would be the first thing in order in the morning after the reading of the Journal; because, although the Committee on the Judiciary was limited to to-day, the previous question is pending upon this proposition.

The count of the House proceeded, and the tellers reported—ayes 136, noes 11.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CENTENNIAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the progress made to this date of the United States centennial commission, appointed in accordance with the requirements of the act approved June 1, 1873; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial Celebration, and ordered to be printed.

STATE DEPARTMENT BUILDING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, submitting an estimate of $1,500,000 for continuing the work on the building for the War, State, and Navy Departments; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from Professor Joseph Henry, transmitting on behalf of the Board of Regents the annual report of the operations, expenditures, and condition of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1874; which was referred to the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and ordered to be printed.

AUSTIN AND TOPOLOVAMPA PACIFIC ROUTE.

Mr. TOWNSEND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4533) to survey the Austin and Topolovampa Pacific route; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

GEOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL SURVEY.

Mr. TOWNSEND also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred under the law to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed five thousand copies of Professor Hayden's annual report of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories for the year 1873, three thousand copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, one thousand for the use of the Senate, and one thousand for the Smithsonian Institution.

And then, on motion of Mr. KELLOGG, (at five o'clock and forty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

ARREARS OF PENSION.

Mr. PRATT. Yesterday I reported back adversely from the Committee on Pensions a bill to give pensioners arrears of pensions, and I stated that from correspondence had with the Pension Office it appeared that it would require upward of $9,000,000 to satisfy the requisitions of that bill. I did not have on my desk at the time the letter of the Commissioner. I now send it to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 2, 1874.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I have the honor to state that under the provisions of the proposed law to extend the period of making application for pension from five years after discharge, or after the date when the right accrued, to January 1, 1875, the number of pensioners now on the rolls that would be benefited thereby, and the amount required to pay the arrears to January 1, 1875, is estimated as follows:

Number invalids,——; amount of arrears	$5,262,291
Number widows and others,——; amount of arrears	4,422,154
Total	9,684,445

To obtain the above estimate an examination of six hundred cases, each, of invalids and widows and others was made, and from the results obtained a comparison with the total number of pensioners on the rolls instituted.

See tabular statement inclosed.

Very respectfully,

JOS. LOCKEY,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. D. D. PRATT,
United States Senate.

Mr. PRATT. I hold in my hand the statement which the Commissioner made and which accompanied that letter, showing the process by which he arrived at the result that $9,654,000 would be required to satisfy the demands of that bill. Without troubling the Senate with listening to this estimate, I ask that it may be incorporated with the letter in the RECORD.

The document is as follows:

Estimate of amount required to pay arrears of pension barred by statutes of limitation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SCOTT. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 631) to facilitate and reduce the expenses of taking testimony in behalf of claimants, to be used before the commissioners of claims, to report it back and request that it be indefinitely postponed. This action is taken on the ground that this bill is supplied by the provisions of a general bill, House bill No. 1565, reported a few days since from the Committee on Claims. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to report back the bill (H. R. No. 2069) for the relief of the sureties of John L. Robinson, late United States marshal for the district of Indiana, and ask that the Committee on Claims be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the ground for that?

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Vermont asks what the ground for this report is. It is upon the ground that this is not a claim for the payment of money at all, but a prayer to be relieved from liability upon the bond of a marshal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1186) for the relief of A. P. Jackson and others, to report back the same and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims. It is purely an application by certain citizens of California for relief on account of the overlapping of a grant of lands that had been made to them, they having been ousted under a prior title. It belongs clearly to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1077) for the relief of Dwight J. McCann, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of Southern Kansas, praying that Isaac T. Gibson may not be confirmed as Indian agent, and for relief from alleged depredations of the Osage tribe of Indians, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of a committee of white settlers on the Allegany Indian reservation in the State of New York, in favor of legislation to define their position upon said reservation, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, a bill on the subject having been reported; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee to whom was referred the memorial of Andrew John, delegate of Seneca Nation, New York Indians, remonstrating against the passage of a law to authorize the said nation to lease lands in the Allegany and Cattaraugus reservations, and to confirm such leases, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 821) for the relief of Peaslee & McClary, late carriers of mails, of Nashua, New Hampshire, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1201) to establish certain telegraphic lines in the several States and Territories as post-roads, and to regulate the transmission of commercial and other intelligence by telegraph; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAYTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1202) to establish a post-route in the State of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BAYARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1203) to amend section 3342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1204) for the payment of interest on 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF THE TWENTY-SECOND JOINT RULE.

Mr. MORTON submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the twenty-second joint rule of the two Houses be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

BUSINESS OF THE POST-OFFICE COMMITTEE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions, the Senate under the rule will proceed to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. ALCORN. I ask permission of the Senate to call up a bill reported at the last session, being the bill (S. No. 720) conferring the right to construct a tunnel through the White Pine Mountain, State of Nevada, and to purchase public lands contiguous thereto. I do not suppose there will be any objection to it. It will take but a moment of time to pass it. It will require no debate. I will state the character of the bill, if that is desired.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I ask the Senator from Mississippi how much time he proposes to occupy?

Mr. ALCORN. Not five minutes; perhaps not one minute. If it occupies time, I will withdraw it.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. From what committee does that bill come?

Mr. ALCORN. From the Committee on Mines and Mining, and it was reported at the last session unanimously. The parties interested are very anxious to have action upon it, and I should be very glad indeed to have it off my hands, so that I may not be troubled continually with regard to calling it up.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I should be very glad to yield to him for that purpose, but that it would be setting a precedent which might be followed in other cases. His committee will be called soon, and he will then have a full opportunity. My impression is that the morning hour will not be fully occupied by the business of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and if that be so, he will then have an opportunity to call up his bill.

Mr. ALCORN. I have great respect for the Senator's regard for precedents; but as I could have passed the bill in less time than we have consumed in talking about it, I will, on the Senator's suggestion, for the time being withdraw my request.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I will state that the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is absent, and I supposed the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] who is next upon the committee, would be here this morning and take charge of the business of the committee. I see he is not in his seat, and until he does appear I will take charge of bills from the committee. The first case, I think, is Senate bill No. 434.

NORTON AND ROBERTSON POST-MARKING STAMP, ETC.

The bill (S. No. 434) referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication and determination the claims of the parties therein named for the past and future use of the Norton post-marking and postage-canceling hand-stamp and the Robertson improved hand-stamp, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. This matter has been in charge of the Senator from Texas, [Mr. FLANAGAN.] I yield to him to take charge of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no use in trying to pass that bill this morning. The case has been referred to about all the committees in this body. Such a bill as that was referred to the Judiciary Committee at this very session, and we reported against it, and it has been indefinitely postponed. I do not believe it is worth while to waste your time on this bill.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. FLANAGAN on the 2d of April, 1874:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 434) referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication and determination the claims of the parties therein named for the past and future use of Norton's post-marking and postage canceling hand-stamp and the Robertson improved hand-stamp, report—

That they have duly considered the same and heard the claimants in person, and by an argument in writing, in explanation of such machines and the inventions, of their utility, of their use by the Government, and saving in clerk hire and in the annual expenditures of the Post-Office Department. As that argument contains the facts in the case, it is herewith submitted, having ascertained that the statements therein contained are correct, not only from the mass of evidence submitted for the consideration of the committee, but the written argument itself having been to the Postmaster-General for his examination and opinion thereon, who informed the committee that the facts therein contained are substantially correct and true.

Your committee have carefully examined the whole subject; have determined, from the mass of testimony submitted with the patents, as to the value of the same to the Government, and as to the use of said inventions by the said Government, that the better way to dispose of the matter is to refer the same to the United States Court of Claims, with full jurisdiction, for investigation and determination of the entire case as between the Government and claimants for the past and future use of the inventions and letters-patent thereon, as claimed by them and admitted by the Post-Office Department.

Your committee have carefully examined Senate bill No. 434, referred to them. Therefore, to carry out the conclusions and determinations hereinbefore set forth, we recommend the passage of said Senate bill 434.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. This claim, I believe, has been often before Congress and always been ignominiously disposed of. I think that the claimant has been refused admission to the Patent Office in consequence of some frauds practiced by him. Certainly this bill cannot be expected to pass here. I remember the claim was in the House of Representatatives when I was a member of the House, at least ten years ago. The claimant has sometimes claimed enormous sums and sometimes moderate sums, and has threatened prosecution of his claim in various manners, ways, and means. I think that if this claim is to be considered, the merits of it will have to be thoroughly gone into, and it will take more than the hour that is allotted to the Post-Office Committee to consider a claim of this character.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I will simply say that the action of the committee was based upon the reports of the various Postmasters-General for a number of years. The Government is certainly in possession of the labor and skill of these patentees, and is using it to-day, and has been for a number of years, without any remuneration to the parties in interest in any way, as all the reports manifested very clearly to the committee. Beyond that I know nothing about the case. Certainly injustice has been done to these parties from time to time, as appears from the evidence. Whether the Senate sees proper to consider it in any way, manner, or shape, certainly it is no interest of mine. It can do as it has done heretofore, from what the Senator from Vermont remarks, if it sees proper to do so.

There is merit in the case, however. Heretofore I understand that there has been a conflict between the different patentees as to who should be the preferred party. I understand now they have all agreed, and this bill represents their one claim all consolidated. The Government has been anxious, as I understand, to pay the proper party or parties at any period whenever the true amount should be ascertained. I think the bill, under the circumstances, ought to pass, referring the matter to the Court of Claims.

Senators speak of not disposing of it in an hour here. Well, sir, one hour would not begin to develop the facts pertaining to this case; three hours, perhaps, would not do it satisfactorily; but it will be the business of the Court of Claims to scrutinize it properly, as I have no doubt they will do, and then justice, perhaps, will be meted out to the parties.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. May I suggest to the Senator from Texas that he allow this case to be laid aside temporarily until other cases are disposed of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not temporarily. I am here now; I do not know that I shall be here when the case is called up after awhile.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Whatever the chairman says I am satisfied with.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I am satisfied the case will provoke considerable discussion and absorb the morning hour, which would be unjust to other meritorious cases. I do not wish by that to say that this case has no merit, because I have given some attention to it, and I think there is some merit in it. The question rests simply upon the measure of compensation. I am satisfied, however, that it will draw out so much discussion as to take up most of the morning hour; and I trust, therefore, the case will be laid aside with the consent of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I have no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the case being laid aside now, for it may be taken up in five minutes, when attention is not called to it and Senators are absent. If the case is to be acted on to-day, now is the best time to do it.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Let it go by.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will let it go by if you do not take it up to-day. Let it go back on the Calendar.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. The practice in the Senate has been, wherever the chairman or any member of the committee entitled to the floor under this call has asked that a case be passed over, to pass it over. The Senator from Vermont now objects to this bill being passed over, and asks that it be considered now in the face of that. I assure him, from the indications I see, that there will be so much discussion that the whole morning hour will be taken up. It strikes me that the Senator from Vermont will not now persist in asking that the case be considered at this time. If so, it will compel the Senator from Texas to insist that the case be not considered to-day. I think this would be unjust to the case and to the parties who are interested. I merely ask that it go over temporarily until the Calendar be passed through and all cases that are in charge of this committee considered.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I have consented to that two or three times.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think that I ought to be accused of any impoliteness to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in not being willing that this case should be passed over temporarily, to be taken up again to-day. Wherever that has been done, it has been when some little defect has been found in a bill to which there was no objection, and it has been laid aside in order that it might be looked into. We all know that this case has been before Congress year after year. We know it has had a good many favorable reports, but that always when it has been brought to a vote it has had an unfavorable vote.

I repeat what I stated before, that this very same claim has been sent to the committee of which I am a member this very year, for it seems the gentlemen who are interested in it are not disposed to rest it upon any one committee, but to saddle it upon us all, like an insurance, so as to take the chances of getting a good report out of some committee. We have examined the case, and have reported against it, and the Senate has indefinitely postponed the bill and decided against it this very session, I do not say upon a discussion and argument, but upon our report.

It being a case of this importance, involving hundreds of thousands of dollars, and being, if the bill is drawn as the one we had, a very suspicious bill on the face of it, which will require a good deal of amendment if the claim is to go to the Court of Claims at all, in a way that I am pretty sure I can point out to my friend from Texas when we get to it, I do not think it is asking too much to say that this bill shall go over to-day unless the Senator in charge of it wishes to go on with it now. I do not wish to be impolite to my friend.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I am ready to have the case considered now if the Senator from Texas states that he is prepared to go on and discuss it. I say further that, not supposing that the business of the committee would be left in my charge, I have given no recent attention to the case, and would not feel justified in pressing its consideration at this time. If the Senator from Texas is willing to waive its consideration at this time, I am willing to defer to his judgment; otherwise I shall press its consideration.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I desire that it should go over.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Then let the next case be taken up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it goes over until to-morrow.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

The next bill on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was the bill (S. No. 651) to provide for the transmission of correspondence by telegraph.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I ask that this bill go over. The chairman of the committee, who has charge of it, is absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN CLINTON.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I ask for the consideration of House bill No. 2345.

The bill (H. R. No. 2345) for the relief of John Clinton, postmaster at Brownsville, Tennessee, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the proper accounting officer of the Treasury to pay $265.35 to John Clinton, or his legal representative, in full of all claim for money stolen from the post-office at Brownsville, Tennessee, on the 1st day of November, 1870.

Mr. PRATT. I inquire whether there is any report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. PRATT. I inquire, for the reason that this claim was before the Committee on Claims in 1872 and there was an adverse report made upon it, and the conclusion of that report I will read to the Senate:

These are the facts, as stated by the memorialist under oath. His deputy confirms the statement that there was a separate, distinct drawer for the use of money received from the issuing of money orders. The commissioner who heard the evidence and committed Ellis certifies that the evidence on the trial showed no negligence on the part of Clinton nor carelessness contributing to the theft, but on the contrary, showed that he took every precaution to protect the interest of the Post-Office Department that prudent and cautious men would take. The prosecuting attorney on the trial and the attorney of the United States for that district confirm the statement of the commissioner. The latter officer certifies that the case is pending before the grand jury of the United States court, but there is doubt of jurisdiction, and no indictment had yet been found. He further certifies that Clinton is a deserving man, and a correct, efficient, and honest postmaster, and recommends that the prayer of his petition be granted. The postmaster at Memphis certifies, under date of February 10, 1871, that since he took charge of that office, June 1, 1869, Clinton had been depositing postal and money-order funds with his office, and he had always found him correct in all his business transactions with him, and expresses the opinion that he is a gentleman of integrity, whose word could be relied on.

That was the conclusion to which the Committee on Claims came when this case was before that committee in December, 1872.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I see by the record that there was no report made by our committee. The bill was reported by the chairman of the committee; I am not conversant with the facts. The Senator from Tennessee perhaps can throw some light upon the subject.

Mr. COOPER. The chairman of the committee made no written report, but I have the report of the House committee, which I desire shall be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, made by Mr. NUNN in the House of Representatives on the 6th of March, 1874:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 627) and the memorial of John Clinton for relief for postal moneys stolen from the post-office at Brownsville, Tennessee, having duly considered the same, submit the following report:

The memorialist was postmaster at Brownsville, Tennessee, on the 1st of November, 1870; he had securely deposited on that day, in the money-drawer of the post-office, (kept expressly for that purpose, and no other,) the sum of $285.37 of money-order funds belonging to the United States Post-Office Department; that the said drawer and post-office were properly locked; but while said memorialist was absent at dinner the said post-office was burglariously entered, and said drawer opened by false keys, and said money stolen; that twenty dollars of it was recovered from the thief, but no more.

The said memorialist has paid said money to the United States Post-Office Department. Your committee find that he was not guilty of negligence in the loss of said money; and, it being clearly shown in the amended petition that the memorialist fully intended to do what was his daily practice, i. e., send that same night by the mail to the post-office at Memphis the proceeds taken during the said day, but was prevented by the robbery taking place during his temporary absence to dinner, your committee recommend that the sum of $265.37 be appropriated for the relief of said memorialist, and herewith report to that effect a substitute for the said bill.

Mr. COOPER. The Committee on Claims in the House of Representatives came to a different conclusion from the Committee on Claims of the Senate. It is simply a question presented to the consideration of the Senate whether this gentleman was guilty of negligence or want of care in the preservation or custody of the money intrusted to his charge. There was voluminous evidence before the committee to satisfy it of the integrity and high character of the postmaster; that it was his custom every day to remit to the proper depository money taken in upon money-orders or taken in at his office; that upon the day in question, with all the care which he had ever exercised, indeed with all the care which he could exercise, he had placed this money in its accustomed place preparatory to sending it off by the evening train to the depository, and during his temporary absence, when everything was closed and locked, the office was entered by false keys and the money taken burglariously; that he immediately undertook to secure the arrest of and had arrested the thief by the proper United States authorities. He recovered twenty dollars of the money, prosecuted the burglar with all vigor by the employment of counsel, and attempted in every way that he could to recover the money.

There is nothing in the case which showed that he could have done anything to preserve the money more than he did do; but it is plain that he exercised every caution, that he was a man of high character and integrity, and that he had occupied the rooms in which the robbery was committed for more than two years without any loss to the Department, and that he paid the money thus stolen into the Department. It is simply a question for the Senate to say whether they will extend this relief or not, the relief not being obtainable anywhere except upon an appeal to Congress for reimbursement. There is no question that at law he would be liable; there is no question that he can obtain no relief on his bond, because it binds him as an insurer; and he only comes in the shape of a petitioner to ask that Congress will relieve him from a hardship which, by no fault or negligence of his, has been visited upon him. I hope that the Senate will not hesitate to give him the relief he asks.

Mr. ALCORN. This is precisely such a case that I take pleasure in making opposition to. Here is a man whose integrity is above question, who stands above suspicion, a public officer, a custodian of public funds, who has been robbed of these funds, and he comes now to Congress to ask relief. I regard all legislation of this sort as dangerous in the extreme. The Congress of the United States is now looking out upon a system of precedents in legislation upon a field on which this Government will be ultimately bankrupted. When an officer of the Government undertakes to discharge a public trust, when he executes his bond and becomes a custodian of public funds, he is promised his commission; and he undertakes upon condition that the Government will allow him a certain commission to discharge that duty and assume all the risk that is incident to the control of these funds. If he loses that money it is his loss, and he has no right to appeal to Congress or elsewhere. If the courts of the country shut him out, there is an end of the matter. When he executes his bond, you leave him with the law; he complies with the law, and let him stand upon his bond and not come to Congress and ask relief in this indirect way.

The proof is always ex parte, and must necessarily be so, before our committees. The Government is not represented before those committees for the purpose of bringing proof to show negligence, to show dishonesty, to show conspiracy. Thousands and millions of dollars are held to-day by public officers and are transported between different parts of the country liable to be seized upon, and conspiracies may be inaugurated for the purpose of having men robbed and then they come here with a story of wonderful hardships and ask Congress to relieve them from what? Relieve them from a legal obligation to pay to the Government money that has been placed in their hands for safe-keeping. They receive it, on the promise of a stipulated consideration, with the understanding that they will faithfully appropriate the money and faithfully account for it. I say, sir, while I stand in Congress to every public official thus situated, "Stand upon your bond, and if the law will not relieve you, I will not."

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. If the proposition of the Senator from Mississippi is to be followed by the Senate, there will be another question arising, whether applicants for offices will be willing to hold them under the practice proposed by the Senator. A moment's reflection will show him that many of these officers have very small salaries, some of them not over ten or twelve dollars per annum, an entirely insufficient consideration to enable the officers to purchase safes and other means of extraordinary security. That answers the objection raised by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PRATT.]

Now, let it be understood that the practice of the Senate is to be reversed if the proposition of the Senator from Mississippi is to be adopted. I think the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have not only established rules, but they have been very carefnl, have scrutinized every case, and have required these things as precedent to the allowance of any claim: First, that the evidence shall appear that the postmaster is a man of integrity, of efficiency; next, that upon the occurrence of a burglary the postmaster has been efficient in notifying the Department, and has taken the usual ordinary, and even extraordinary, precautions to arrest the offender; next, that an agent has been sent to investigate and verify the facts.

Wherever notice has been given to the Department and the Department has failed to respond, it has not been the fault of the postmaster, and the committee have ruled in his favor. In this case this person is not only proved to have been efficient and honest, but was so efficient as to arrest the offender, not only notifying the Department but taking upon himself the responsiblity of arresting the offender and securing a portion of the money stolen.

In these small post-offices, if bondsmen are to be held for these extraordinary acts, where will you find bondsmen, and where will you find office-holders? It seems to me that the committee and the Senate should exercise a liberal construction of such cases and in that way the committee have acted on this case. Since I have listened to the case as detailed here, especially by the Senator from Tennessee, with the general knowledge I had of the facts, I am clear that it comes within the rule of the committee, and I ask that the bill pass.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I do not propose to say a word as to the merits of this claim. I put my opposition to it upon this ground, without going beyond it. I think it is agreed here that there should be an end some time of investigation, as in the courts of litigation. This claim was presented to a committee of this body and examined carefully and reported against. There is no additional testimony, as I understand; but after one committee of this body—I do not claim that is any better able to investigate, or more capable of investigating this question, than the committee that reported this bill—had reported against the claim after a most careful consideration, there being no additional testimony, it is referred to another committee, and that committee reports in its favor; and thus these claims are bandied backward and forward first to one committee, reported adversely, and then to another committee with the hope that they can have a favorable report, but being reported adversely there it goes to another committee, and so it goes the round of the committees. Now, because the claim has been once reported adversely, because there is no additional testimony, and because also (if I may be allowed to say one word as to the merits) there does not seem to be one particle of ground upon which the claim can justly and legally stand, I think we ought to dispose of it at once and reject the bill.

Mr. ALCORN. I desire to say a word, and only one word, in reply to the honorable Senator from Michigan. He says that if we lay it down as a rule that we shall hold officers to be responsible on their bonds we shall have difficulty in finding public officers to discharge the trusts necessary to the machinery of this Government. I have seen no dearth of applicants up to this time. Perhaps it is for the reason, as the Senator's argument has suggested, that they come forward upon the idea that if they lose the public funds or if by any accident the public funds are lost in their hands the Government will make good the deficit; that they will be reimbursed by act of Congress. I think that perhaps if we had reversed the rule and let every public officer understand that he must remain liable upon his bond, knowing the fact that courts of equity take jurisdiction of every case of this character which ought to be relieved, perhaps there would not be such a plethora, such an influx, such a continual swelling tide of applicants for public offices. Even though the rule I suggest might require that higher salaries should be paid to officers, it would be a source of economy to the Government to pay salaries to officers which would compensate them for the discharge of their duties, and require them upon their bonds to hold themselves responsible for any defalcation that may accrue to them while in the discharge of their public trusts. But the rule the honorable Senator lays down relaxes altogether the obligation, changes the obligation that the office-holder assumes when he executes his bond. The rule that I lay down may result in special hardships, but it is better that a few deserving men should suffer than that the doors should be opened to a system of legislation of this character.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I believe our committee have occupied not quite one half hour. As it has been the custom to allow other committees a full hour, I ask that the time be extended half an hour to make up an hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be extended until half past one o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the Senator will not make that motion. I wish to make some remarks on the pending special order, and I do not want them to be prolonged into to-morrow. I hope the Senator will not press his motion or occupy any time that belongs to the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio objects, the Chair understands.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Before the Senator from Ohio objects, I desire to call his attention to the fact that it has been the practice to allow other committees one full hour. This committee has occupied but half an hour. I am not disposed to interpose now to prevent the Senator from uttering the speech which he proposes to deliver to the Senate; I am willing to defer to him under the circumstances, if to-morrow morning the Post-Office Committee can have one-half hour to make up their hour. Perhaps that can be done without objection. ["Agreed."]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads may have one-half hour at the close of resolutions to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. MORTON. That may interfere with somebody to-morrow morning as much as it does with the Senator from Ohio this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio objects.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Then I ask that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have half an hour longer to-day, to make up the time that has been conceded to other committees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio objects to that, as the Chair understands.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not object. This has been the practice with other committees. The Senator has the whole day for his speech, and to-morrow if need be.

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; I do not want to go into to-morrow, but the Committee on Private Land Claims will not occupy ten minutes when they are called, and the Senator can have part of their time.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not think the Senator from Ohio should be called upon to object to such a request. The Senator from Ohio has the floor at the end of the morning hour. He wants to proceed, and I do not think he should be put to making an objection. Here is a bill—I do not say anything about its merits—for a private claim; and it seems to me there is no reason why a Senator should be asked to give way or why the business of the Senate should be changed in its natural course to consider this particular bill. Therefore I hope the Senator from Ohio will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that other committees have had their hours prolonged during the discussion upon the Louisiana question, under circumstances precisely similar to the circumstances of to-day. The Senator from Ohio knows very well that I would not interpose, in the line of what I felt to be my duty, any objection to his proceeding with the discussion of the question before the Senate as the regular order. I am only appealing to the practice of the Senate. It is not just to allow other committees one whole hour and shut out this committee from the same privilege. I am not simply contending for this case; there are other cases lying back of it in which other Senators are interested for their constituents, and it is hardly just to them to shut out this committee from its allotted time, the time allowed to other committees, and I think I am verified by the recollection of Senators that this has been the practice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I ask that unanimous consent be given the Post-Office Committee to occupy half an hour to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate resumes the consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ] on the 8th instant, upon which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Now I give notice——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. THURMAN. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that the day after to-morrow the Committee on Private Land Claims will be called, and they will not occupy ten minutes of the time of the Senate, and then I shall most cheerfully, if I have any power as to the disposition of the time, give him all the rest of our morning.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I thank the Senator for his courtesy, but at the same time he has suggested that he does not hold the power to yield to the Senator from Michigan. I recognize the courtesy, which I am always ready to return to him, but it is beyond his power and lies in the bosom of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of State, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of June 23, 1874, a copy of the report of Major William P. Craighill on the examination and cost of the construction of the third subdivision of the central transportation route; which was referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 935) to provide for writs of errors in certain criminal causes, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SELF-GOVERNMENT IN LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The unfinished business of yesterday is before the Senate.

Mr. MORTON. One day last week the resolution in regard to the constitutional amendment was postponed on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] until this morning. Now, I do not wish to interfere with the personal convenience of the Senator; on the other hand I am unwilling that the consideration of that important question shall be postponed from time to time. According to the Senator's own motion that question was entitled I think to the preference to-day. I am as unwilling as any Senator to interfere with the convenience of the Senator from Ohio or any other member of the Senate who desires to speak; but at the same time, in view of the importance of that question, I cannot consent that it shall be postponed from time to time in this way. I was prepared at that time to go on with it, but the Senator from Ohio insisted that it should be postponed, and upon his own motion it was put off until this morning.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I desire to submit my views on the subject under consideration before the adjournment of the Senate to-day; but the field is so large, that in order to do that I shall have to condense my remarks to the utmost extent of my power and to leave much unsaid that under other circumstances I should like to say and that in my judgment might properly be said.

In order that I may not occupy more time than I have indicated, I must request Senators not to interrupt me. When I shall have concluded my remarks I will with the greatest pleasure answer to the best of my ability any pertinent question that any Senator desires to put, but until then I pray that I may not be interrupted. I ask that the resolution under consideration may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. SCHURZ on the 8th instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire what legislation by Congress is necessary to secure to the people of the State of Louisiana their rights of self-government under the Constitution, and to report with the least possible delay by bill or otherwise.

Mr. THURMAN. That resolution, Mr. President, requires us not to stop at the election in Louisiana of 1874, but to go back to the source of her troubles, the transactions of 1872. I shall therefore first speak of them, and, although I am aware that to many who will hear me what I shall say will be "a thrice-told tale," and therefore necessarily tedious, yet, as no complete presentation of the case can be made without going back to the origin of the difficulties, it is indispensable that I take that course.

There was an election for State officers and members of Congress in Louisiana in the year 1872. The officers voted for were, I believe, all the executive officers of the State. Furthermore, a General Assembly of the State was to be chosen at the same time; and, in addition to these, members of Congress from the several congressional districts and one member to be elected by the voters of the State at large. The result of that election was ascertained three times. It was first ascertained by a board known in that State and in this Senate as the "De Feriet returning board," a board whose duty it was under the law to canvass those returns and declare the result. They were again canvassed by what has been called the Forman board, a board appointed by the senate of Louisiana of what is known as the McEnery legislature; and the third canvass, with the original returns before them, was made by a committee of the Senate of the United States, the Committee on Privileges and Elections, not one member of which was a democrat. And now, sir, what was the result of that election as shown by those official election returns? It was what I am about to read, for these three canvasses all ended in substantially the same result. It appeared by the official returns that John McEnery had for the office of governor received 65,579 votes; that William Pitt Kellogg had received 55,973; leaving a majority in McEnery's favor of 9,606. It appeared that for the office of lieutenant-governor Mr. Penn received 68,251 votes, and Mr. Antoine 53,194; making a majority for Penn of 15,057 votes. I should have said before that McEnery and Penn were the conservative candidates. For secretary of state Mr. Armstead, the conservative candidate, received 62,856 votes, and Mr. Deslonde, the republican candidate, 53,594; making Armstead's majority 9,262; for attorney-general Mr. Ogden, the conservative candidate, received 66,806 votes, and Mr. Field, the republican candidate, 54,848; making Ogden's majority, 11,958; for state auditor Mr. Graham, the conservative candidate, received 66,767 votes, and Mr. Clinton, the republican candidate, 54,479; making Graham's majority 12,288; for superintendent of education Mr. Lusher, the conservative candidate, received 67,835 votes, and Mr. Brown, the republican candidate, 53,558; making Lusher's majority 14,277; for member of Congress at large Mr. Sheridan, conservative, received 65,016 votes, and Mr. Pinchback, republican, 54,402; making Sheridan's majority 10,614.

Of members of the house of representatives of the State Legislature the same returns showed that the conservatives, or, as they were called, the fusionists, elected 71 members, the republicans 32 members, and there were 7 vacancies: making a conservative majority in the house of representatives of 39 members. In the senate there were 21 or 22 new senators elected. The senate consists of 36 members—18 elected one year and 18 elected in another year; but owing to there being three or four vacancies, there were 21 or 22 new senators elected. Of these the republicans elected 4 and the fusionists 15, making 19; and there were two vacancies. Of the old senators there were 7 republicans and 7 conservatives. So that the senate stood, conservatives 22, republicans 11; a conservative majority of 11 members.

Mr. President, one would think, upon this bare statement, that of course the government of Louisiana for the last two years has been in the hands of the men thus appearing, by the official returns, to have been elected; that her governor, her lieutenant-governor, her other executive officers, and her General Assembly have been the men who were, according to the official returns, elected by such large majorities. And if a stranger to the facts were told that such is not the case, that for two years these State offices have been held, in every instance, by the defeated candidates; that for two years the Legislature recognized by the President of the United States, and actually exercising power, has been in the hands of the radicals, what would such a person naturally suppose had taken place? If he had any idea at all of constitutional law, any idea whatever of free institutions, any idea whatever of formal and orderly legal proceeding, he would necessarily suppose that the men who by the official returns were entitled to the offices had gone into possession of them on their prima fâcie case; that then their right to them had been contested under the constitution and laws of Louisiana, to which alone the contest belonged; and he would suppose that upon that contest it was proved that McEnery and Penn and Armstead and the rest of them were not actually elected, but that, on the contrary, Kellogg and Antoine and their associates were elected, and that being established under the constitution and laws of Louisiana, McEnery and his associates had been ousted from their offices, and that they had been conferred upon the other parties; and he would also suppose that the seats of the members in the senate and house of representatives of the State of Louisiana had been determined by the respective houses, pursuant to the constitution of the State.

That would be all that any man, knowing nothing but the Constitution and the law, could suppose to have taken place, to account for the astounding fact that men elected to office by from nine to fifteen thousand majority, according to the official returns, and a majority of a Legislature, shown by the same returns to have been elected, are all unseated and out of office, and the offices in the hands of their defeated opponents. And yet, sir, that reasonable expectation of a student of constitutional law, or of any man, student or not, having the least idea of constitutional institutions, would be as far from the truth as one pole of this globe is from the other. Kellogg never obtained his seat by any contest of McEnery's election. Antoine never obtained his seat by any such contest; not one of these executive officers ever inaugurated such a contest, and not one of these defeated candidates for the Legislature ever obtained his seat there by the regular and orderly judgment of the lawful senate or house of representatives of the State. But the men who have exercised supreme power in Louisiana for the last two years have held their offices and exercised their powers, according to the finding of your own Committee on Privileges and Elections, by means of a void midnight order made by a Federal judge without authority and enforced by the bayonets of the Army of the United States, and upheld by the Chief Magistrate of the Republic; and the sole title to-day of William P. Kellogg to be governor of Louisiana is the sanction by the President of the United States of these unconstitutional proceedings, and the sole foundation upon which he stands, the sole thing that upholds him in his usurpation, are the glittering bayonets of the Federal Army.

I cannot go at any length into the disgusting details showing how this usurpation was accomplished; and yet there are some things that I ought to say about it, although in saying them I cannot do more than repeat what is better said in the report of your own committee, or if not better said there, certainly better said in the exhaustive speech delivered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] at the last session of Congress.

How was this thing done? I trace the beginning of it to Washington City. That is where I believe we must begin. The Legislature of Louisiana was to meet on the 9th day of December, 1872. Before the meeting and before the promulgation of the returns of the election Mr. Kellogg filed in the circuit court of the United States, of which a man now too notorious to need any comment upon his name, one Durell, was the judge. Kellogg filed in that court a bill, the object of which, as it appeared in the bill, was simply to perpetuate testimony, simply to preserve what he said were the returns of the election and the evidence that accompanied those returns. Whether that court had any jurisdiction to entertain that bill or not is a mooted question. To my mind nothing is clearer than that it had no jurisdiction. The majority of your committee evidently inclined to the belief that it had no jurisdiction whatsoever of that case, and I need not say to the lawyers of the Senate or to any man, that the proceedings in a court without jurisdiction are utterly and absolutely nugatory and void. But if it had any jurisdiction, it was simply to preserve the returns of the election and the evidences that accompanied them. It could go no further. By an argument that is perfectly unanswerable the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections have demonstrated that it could in nowise go one step beyond that. That bill was filed. It prayed no affirmative relief, except an injunction that should operate to preserve papers. It was nothing in the world but an injunction bill. It prayed no affirmative relief otherwise of any kind. It could not, for the court had no jurisdiction for anything else, even if it had it for that. The bill was filed, and (unless there were previous consultations, unless there was a secret understanding) before it could be known in Washington City that Durell would make any order or any decree whatsoever in the premises—certainly before there was any right to suppose that he would go beyond his jurisdiction and make an order that he had no authority whatsoever to make—this telegram was sent by the Attorney-General of the United States to the United States marshal at New Orleans:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 3, 1872.

S. B. PACKARD, Esq.,
United States Marshal, New Orleans, Louisiana:

You are to enforce the decrees and mandates of the United States courts, no matter by whom resisted, and General Emory will furnish you with all necessary troops for that purpose.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

Where was the necessity for that telegram? There is not a word in all this correspondence up to that time that shows any application to the President for troops, any official representation of danger that the lawful decrees or any decrees of the court would be resisted.

There had simply been a bill filed praying for an injunction, and a provisional injunction had been allowed. There was no affirmative decree to execute. There was no decree that could be resisted in any such wise as to make it the duty of the marshal of the United States with the military power to interfere. Nothing of that kind had taken place; but yet the Attorney-General of the United States, on the 3d day of December, says in advance to the marshal that he is to enforce all decrees and all mandates of the court, no matter by whom resisted, and that he is to call on General Emory, commanding the United States Army in New Orleans, for all the aid which he may need. Why was this telegram sent if there was not a secret understanding that by unlawful orders of Durell and the employment of the Army the Kellogg government was to be installed and the lawful government excluded?

The telegram was sent, and what then took place? It was meant to be, and was understood to be, an assurance that the Federal Executive would sustain the proceeding that had been inaugurated by Kellogg, and which was to be followed by other more effective proceedings. Kellogg's bill was good for nothing by itself. His injunction would amount to nothing. It would not defeat the will of the people; it would not prevent the assembling of the Legislature; it would not prevent the conservatives having a majority in that Legislature—a large majority. That Legislature, by the constitution of Louisiana, was to count and declare the votes for governor and the other officers of the State. Therefore the bill was not sufficient at all; but when this order came to Marshal Packard from the Department of Justice, so called, in this city, what took place? It was sent on the 3d of December. On the night of the 5th, Durell, not sitting in court, holding no court, without any motion of either party in the case, closeted with Marshal Packard and the attorneys of the plaintiff, but without any motion, himself drew up or dictated an order directing Packard to take possession of the State-house of Louisiana and permit no one to enter that State-house except certain persons referred to in that order. There was no process issued upon this so-called order; not one thing that would give validity even to the process of a justice of the peace; and yet, under that midnight order, made not in court, made not by a court, made by this man in conspiracy with this same Marshal Packard and the plaintiff's attorneys, before two o'clock of that night that State-house was seized by the troops of the United States brought there for the purpose, and batteries were planted around it to keep the citizens of Louisiana from entering their own house where the laws were to be made.

Now, Mr. President, would Durell ever have made that order, would Packard ever have attempted to execute that order, but for this telegram which two days beforehand had assured them that they were to have support from Washington? Before anything could be known of the merits of that controversy except that upon official returns the conservative candidates were elected, before anything could be known in Washington city even tending to show that those candidates thus officially returned as elected were not in fact chosen, this Attorney-General sends that mandate to his marshal, that he is to obey and enforce all orders and all mandates of the court down there, and that he is to call for military aid in order to execute them. Then, right on the heel of that comes this midnight order, under which the State-house was seized and held for six weeks by the military of the United States, and not a single man permitted to enter within its portals except the conspirators, their aiders and abetters, unless he had been returned as a member of that Legislature by the Lynch board, as it was called, a board that had no legal existence whatever, and that had no more power to count and canvass the votes than any three Senators on this floor had to count and canvass them.

Thus by the direct interference of the military of the United States under a void order of a judge and not of a court, an order which every member of your Committee on Privileges and Elections has characterized as without parallel and as wholly indefensible, and in language far stronger than that—under that order and with the aid of the Government here at Washington the will of the people of Louisiana was completely overthrown, her constitution set at naught, the mode of contesting elections absolutely disregarded and contemned, and a usurpation established there under which that people have groaned from that day to this, and which has been the pregnant source of all the troubles in that State.

Do I state it too strongly? Who is it, pray, that pretended to count in Kellogg and his associates? Who were they who pretended to count in the radical majority in the Legislature of that State? What is called the "Lynch board," a pretended returning board under the law of 1870 of the State of Louisiana? Was there any such legal board in existence? If anything could be completely demonstrated beyond all possibility of doubt, it is demonstrated by your committee in their report, and it has been again demonstrated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] in his thorough and exhaustive speech on the subject, that that Lynch board had not even a color of authority, much less any legal right whatsoever, to count those returns. It was a sheer, downright usurpation for that board to assume to count anything. Let us see a little on the subject of this Lynch board and of the canvass which it pretended to make. I read from the report of your Committee on Privileges and Elections:

On the 6th of December, 1872, the Lynch board—Bovee, (who was then acting as secretary of state in place of Herron,) Lynch, Longstreet, and Hawkins—pretended to have canvassed the returns of the election, and certified to the secretary of state that Kellogg had been elected governor; Antoine, lieutenant-governor; Clinton, auditor; Field, attorney-general; Brown, superintendent of education; and Deslondes, secretary of state; and also certified a list of persons whom they had determined to be elected to the Legislature.

Then the committee proceed:

There is nothing in all the comedy of blunders and frauds under consideration more indefensible than the pretended canvass of this board.

The following are some of the objections to the validity of their proceedings:

1. The board had been abolished by the act of November 20.

2. The board was under valid and existing injunctions restraining it from acting at all, and an injunction in the Armstead case restraining it from making any canvass not based upon the official returns of the election.

3. Conceding the board was in existence, and had full authority to canvass the returns, it had no returns to canvass.

The returns from the parishes had been made, under the law of 1870, to the governor, and not one of them was before the Lynch board.

It was testified before your committee by Mr. Bovee himself, who participated in this canvass by the Lynch board, that they were determined to have a republican Legislature, and made their canvass to that end. The testimony abundantly establishes the fraudulent character of their canvass. In some cases they had what were supposed to be copies of the original returns; in other cases they had nothing but newspaper statements, and in other cases, where they had nothing whatever to act upon, they made an estimate based upon their knowledge of the political complexion of the parish, of what the vote ought to have been. They also counted a large number of affidavits purporting to be sworn to by voters who had been wrongfully denied registration or the right to vote, many of which affidavits they must have known to be forgeries. It was testified by one witness that he forged over a thousand affidavits, and delivered them to the Lynch board while it was in session.

And here I may remark it is proved that they counted these forged affidavits as votes:

It is quite unnecessary to waste time in considering this part of the case; for no person can examine the testimony ever so cursorily without seeing that this pretended canvass had no semblance of integrity.

That was the pretended canvass under which the whole power of government in the State of Louisiana has been exercised for the last two years. I may be pardoned if I bestow a little more time upon this infamous Lynch board. But in doing so I prefer to quote the language of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, in the speech to which I have referred.

I will ask the Clerk to read from that speech the passages I have marked on pages 15 and 18.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. EDMUNDS. They could not take a part and reject a part?

Mr. CARPENTER. They could not take a part and reject a part. It was all to be counted, or nothing to be counted. In the first place, they had no jurisdiction to inquire; and, in the second place, if they had jurisdiction, they must either count or reject the return; but in this parish of Bossier they did neither the one nor the other. The returns showed that Mr. McEnery had 953 votes and Kellogg 555. If they had found the riot, &c., then they would have excluded that poll, and neither McEnery nor Kellogg would have had a vote from it; but, nevertheless, by their ciphering they gave Kellogg 1,159 votes; they gave Antoine, the candidate for lieutenant-governor, 1,159 votes; they gave Deslonde 1,159 votes; they gave Clinton 1,159 votes; they gave Field 1,159 votes; they gave Brown 1,159 votes. They gave McEnery nothing, Penn nothing, Armstead nothing, Graham nothing, Ogden nothing, Lusher nothing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you say that is a fact found by the committee in the form of a report or appearing in the evidence there?

Mr. CARPENTER. Certainly. The returns themselves show that McEnery had 953 votes in that parish. He did not get a vote in this return. The returns show that Kellogg had 555 votes; he gets 1,159. How much more satisfactory than an election that is!

Take the parish of Natchitoches. The returns show that McEnery had 1,250 votes; Penn, 1,252; Armstead, 1,243; Ogden, 1,252; Graham, 1,252; Lusher, 1,251; Kellogg, 550; Antoine, 548; Deslonde, 549; Field, 549; Clinton, 548; Brown, 549. This board gave Kellogg 1,206 instead of 550. They gave Antoine, 1,206; Deslonde, 1,206; Clinton, 1,206; Field, 1,206; Brown, 1,206; McEnery, nothing; Penn, nothing; Armstead, nothing; Ogden, nothing; Graham, nothing; Lusher, nothing.

Mr. CARPENTER. Another witness, Mr. Jaques, appeared before the committee, and at first I was strongly impressed with the belief that he was lying, that his whole story was made up, and I went for him with a pretty thorough cross-examination, followed him through several pages, and finally became thoroughly convinced that the man was telling the truth. He swore that he had forged twelve hundred affidavits; he said he took the names from an old worn-out poll-list, that a great many of them were dead, and a great many probably never did live. He made up the affidavits without seeing the men, hundreds of them. They were certified as sworn to in blank by a judge before they were filled; and the proceeding, as he testifies to it, is one of the richest that I know of in the history of politics. His testimony—I will not stop to read it—is found on pages 520, 521, 522, and 523, and pages 526, 527, 528, and 530, and fully sustains all that I say.

The affidavits were printed, and they were delivered to this fellow to be manufactured, and with the jurat of the judge attached certifying that —— —— had sworn to the affidavit. When Mr. Jaques took the affidavits, filled them up, signed names to them, then delivered twelve hundred of them at one time to Mr. Bovee, in the open session of the board, the testimony leaving no doubt that the board knew that they were forged affidavits; and, indeed, he says that Bovee joked him afterward for days by asking him if they had got through voting up at Plaquemine Parish.

In the parish of Tangipahoa, Barkdull swears, on pages 562, 563, and 564, (which I will not take the time to read as I am occupying so much time,) to a very remarkable state of things, and I give the pages so that any Senator can refer to them. The returns show in that parish that Tait had 111 majority over Wands—Tait being the democratic candidate. The witness went to this parish to investigate, and found that there was no particular fraud; nobody had heard of any; and he came down to one of our republican men, and he said, "That won't do; you have got to go back; we are beaten unless we make out some fraud here." He went back, got up some affidavits, came down to this board, and they gave Wands 750 and Tait 622; that is, instead of giving Tait, as the returns showed, 111 majority, they gave his opponent 128.

This is a fair sample and by no means an exaggerated statement; it is taken at random from the proceedings of that board. They went through in this way and reached the end of their labors on the 6th of December, 1872. The entire returns from the State showed that McEnery had 65,579 votes, and that Kellogg had 55,973, so that McEnery's majority was 9,606. That can be seen in this report on page 81. This Lynch board gave Kellogg 72,890 and McEnery 54,029, making Kellogg's majority 18,861; that is in place of McEnery's majority as shown by the returns being 9,606, they gave Kellogg almost twice that, 18,861. They were not going to do things by halves. If they were going to have a governor, they were not going to stop on the majority that the democratic governor in fact got; they were going better, and they doubled and gave Kellogg 18,000. The returns showed Penn's majority to be 15,000, and they gave Antoine 13,000.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish those who have not looked into this matter to understand what these so-called affidavits were and the use which was made of them. Under the law of Louisiana, if the judges of election at the various polls in the State, called there commissioners of election, certified with the return of the election that a fair election had been prevented by riot, tumult, or the like, and if this certificate of the commissioners was supported by the affidavit of three reputable citizens, then it was the duty of the returning board to investigate that matter, and if they found that there had been such riot, or tumult, or obstruction, as prevented a fair and free election, then what were they to do? Then they were to throw that poll out altogether. They could not take part of it and reject part, but they were to throw it out altogether. Now, what did this Lynch returning board do? Without a single return of that sort from any commissioners of election whomsoever, without one single particle of official representation such as the law required and such as would have been necessary to authorize a legal board to reject a poll, they rejected poll after poll and parish after parish. Mark it, a parish there is equivalent to a county in the other States, and often contains a much larger territory and a larger population than the average counties of the North. They threw out poll after poll and parish after parish. Then what did they do? If they had been a legal board, they could not have gone one step further; but instead of observing even the law under which they pretended to act, they allowed one Colonel Jaques and some other fellows of his kind to come in with what purported to be printed affidavits. Affidavits of what? That men had voted at these polls? No, sir; but that they had not voted, and that if they had been allowed to vote, or had not been afraid to vote, or could have voted without traveling too far, if they had been at the polls, they would have voted the republican ticket. And these pretended affidavits of men that they did not vote but that if they had voted they would have voted the republican ticket, that board counted as so many votes for Kellogg and his associates and for the radical candidates for the Legislature!

Mark it, sir, if they had been genuine affidavits they could not have been counted, for there was no law whatsoever that authorized their count. But these were not genuine affidavits; they were printed affidavits with the jurat—that is, a certificate of a judge that they had been sworn to before him—and not one single word of them had been sworn to at all; but they were in blank, without the name of the affiant, at the time the judge delivered them out by thousands to the conspirators who were engaged in or were promoting the pretended canvass by the Lynch board. And what did they do? They delivered over twenty-five hundred of them, I think it was, to this Colonel Jacques. He returned twelve hundred and six at one time, not one single one of which was signed by the man whose name was attached, but every name was a forgery, and of the names to them, many of them were taken from old poll-books and were of persons who were dead and gone. He brought them in in that way to make up the majority for Kellogg and his associates; and, pray, what reception did he have from the board? When he presented himself with twelve hundred forged affidavits that the board knew as well as he did were forgeries, he was greeted with the pleasant and complimentary remark, "Why, Jacques, you are a hell of a fellow!" He was in their estimation a hell of a fellow at getting up affidavits; and so he went on afterward, piling them in from day to day, until the admiring board exclaimed, "Why, colonel, have they not done voting in Plaquemines yet?" And now, sir, the pretended canvass, so conducted, of this infamous "Lynch board" is the only pretense of title of Kellogg and his associates and of that radical majority in the so-called Legislature of Louisiana that has ruled there for the past two years.

I shall not go into what is said in the report of your committee about the pretended recognition of the Lynch board by the courts in Louisiana, and which supposed recognition is completely exposed and exploded in the report. But it might be worth while for a moment to dwell upon one fact, that the very court that decided that this Lynch board was a proper returning board was held by one of the Lynch board himself, who had been appointed judge by Pinchback, and every single man on that returning board, either himself or in the person of a near relative, was rewarded with a lucrative office either by Pinchback or Kellogg or the so-called Legislatnre of Louisiana—every one of them was immediately rewarded. They would not wait for their pay. The members of this pretended returning board got offices, some of them worth $10,000 a year, in payment for such services as I have shown to you from this report and from the extract that I have had read from the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin. Well, sir, to what conclusion did your committee come? After going over the whole ground, this is the conclusion of the majority of the committee:

> Indeed it is impossible not to see that this bill was filed—

That is, one of the bills that was filed in furtherance of the conspiracy—> and the restraining order thereon was issued for the sole purpose of accomplishing, what no Federal court has the jurisdiction to do, the organization of a State Legislature.

And your committee cannot refrain from expressing their astonishment that any judge of the United States should thus unwarrantably have interfered with a State government, and know no language too strong to express their condemnation of such a proceeding.

It is the opinion of your committee, that but for the unjustifiable interference of Judge Durell, whose orders were executed by United States troops, the canvass made by the De Feriet board, and promulgated by the governor, declaring McEnery to have been elected governor, &c., and also declaring who had been elected to the Legislature, would have been acquiesced in by the people, and that government would have entered quietly upon the exercise of the sovereign power of the State. But the proceedings of Judge Durell, and the support given to him by United States troops, resulted in establishing the authority de facto of Kellogg and his associates in State offices, and of the persons declared by the Lynch board to be elected to the Legislature. We have already seen that the proceedings of that board cannot be sustained without disregarding all the principles of law applicable to the subject, and ignoring the distinction between good faith and fraud.

Your committee are, therefore, led to the conclusion that, if the election held in November, 1872, be not absolutely void for frauds committed therein, McEnery and his associates in State officers, and the persons certified as members of the Legislature by the De Feriet board, ought to be recognized as the legal government of the State. Considering all the facts established before your committee, there seems no escape from the alternative that the McEnery government must be recognized by Congress, or Congress must provide for a new election.

That was the judgment of the majority of the committee. In those conclusions every member of the committee but one agreed. It is true that Judge Trumbull submitted a separate report of his views, but he concurred fully in what I have read; and Mr. Hill also submitted a separate view, but concurred fully in the positions found by the majority as to the illegality of the pretended canvass of the Lynch board and as to the usurpation of Kellogg and his associates. He presented his own views simply because he differed as to what was the proper remedy.

What said Judge Trumbull upon the subject? I read it because it is in a few words and is extremely well and forcibly expressed. He said:

> The history of the world does not furnish a more palpable instance of usurpation than that by which Pinchback was made governor, and the persons returned by the Lynch board the Legislature of Louisiana; nor can a parallel be found for the unfeeling and despotic answers sent by order of the President to the respectful appeals of the people of Louisiana. This pretended Legislature, installed in power by the aid of the United States Army, in pursuance of a void order of a United States district judge, proceeded to elect John Ray to represent the State of Louisiana in the Senate of the United States; and it is said the Senate must receive him because the supreme court of Louisiana has decided the Pinchback legislature to be the rightful Legislature of the State, and that the Senate is bound to follow the decision of the State court as to what constitutes its Legislature.

Then Senator Trumbull goes on and demonstrates the utter fallacy of any such argument as that.

Mr. President, I should like to refer to the telegrams quoted in Senator Trumbull's "views," showing the animus and purpose of the conspiracy, but I cannot go through them all; it would take up too much time, and I must come down to the present day. But he refers to the respectful appeal made by the people of Louisiana to the President and which was scornfully rejected, and of that I wish to speak.

The first act of the so-called Legislature was to impeach Warmoth, the governor of the State, and, without paying the least regard to the requirements of the law, to suspend him from his functions and to install Pinchback, one of the chief conspirators, and president of the previous senate, as governor. And Pinchback, supported by President Grant and the Army, continued to claim that office until the usurpation was completely effected by the installation of Kellogg as governor.

In this state of the case, and the conspirators having telegraphed the President to recognize Pinchback and his pretended Legislature, McEnery sent to the President by telegraph the following most respectful and reasonable appeal:

NEW ORLEANS, 12*th*, 1872.

His Excellency U. S. GRANT,
President United States:

> Claiming to be governor-elect of this State, I beg you, in the name of all justice, to suspend recognition of either of the dual governments now in operation here until there can be laid before you all facts, and both sides, touching legitimacy of either government. The people denying the legitimacy of Pinchback government and its Legislature simply ask to be heard, through committee of many of our best citizens on eve of departure for Washington, before you recognize the one or the other of said governments. I do not believe we will be condemned before we are fully heard.
> JNO. MCENERY.

Not only did McEnery appeal, not only did the members who had been elected to the Legislature appeal to the President, but this telegram was sent to him:

NEW ORLEANS, December 12, 1872.

> SIR: As chairman of a committee of citizens appointed under authority of a mass meeting recently held in this city, I am instructed to inform you that said committee is about leaving here for Washington to lay before you and the Congress of the United States the facts of the political difficulties at present existing in this State, and further earnestly to request you to delay executive action in the premises until after the arrival and hearing of said committee, which is composed of business and professional men without regard to past political affiliations.
> THOMAS A. ADAMS,
> Chairman.

His Excellency U. S. GRANT,
President of the United States.

Could anything have been more respectful, more fair, more consonant with justice, better calculated to produce effect upon a fair-minded Chief Magistrate clothed for the time being with the tremendous power of deciding which was the legitimate government there, (not deciding, as I contend, so as to bind her people forever, as some lawyers have seemed to think, but so far as the United States for the time being were concerned) clothed with that tremendous power of deciding until Congress should act which of the two governments then in existence, either the McEnery or the Pinchback government, the McEnery legislature or the Pinchback legislature, was the true government in that State—could anything have been better calculated to arrest a fair-minded Magistrate under those circumstances, and make him pause and at least hear both sides?

But what answer was made? There is not a despot on the face of the earth, one would suppose, that would not at least have listened to what the men had to say who were apparently elected to the offices of state by majorities of from 9,000 to 15,000 votes—the men who, being two-thirds in number of the Legislature, appeared by the official returns to be duly elected; and then the citizens themselves, composed of men of all parties and of all occupations, proposing to send here a committee of one hundred, and only asking the President to suspend judgment until they could lay the case before him. I know of no despot on the face of this globe that would have refused to hear men under such circumstances state their case. But what answer was given to these men? On the very next day, just as soon as the telegraphic dispatch was received, the Attorney-General telegraphed as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 13, 1872.

Hon. JOHN MCENERY,
New Orleans, Louisiana:

Your visit with a hundred citizens will be unavailing so far as the President is concerned. His decision is made and will not be changed, and the sooner it is acquiesced in the sooner good order and peace will be restored.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

The usurpation began on the 9th day of December, when the pretended Kellogg legislature assembled, when Warmoth, the governor, was impeached and turned out of office in violation of the constitution of Louisiana in less than two hours after the assembling of that Legislature, when Pinchback was inagurated as governor. All that was done on that day, and it was simply impossible that the President could have had all the information before him, which was in the possession of those who were opposed to these revolutionary proceedings; but yet Mr. Attorney-General writes a telegram that the mind of the President is made up and cannot be changed. When did he make up his mind? At the very inception of the difficulties as I believe, but certainly as early as the 12th, when this telegram was sent by the Attorney-General:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 12, 1872.

Acting Governor PINCHBACK,
New Orleans Louisiana:

Let it be understood that you are recognized by the President as the lawful executive of Louisiana, and that the body assembled at Mechanics' Institute is the lawful Legislature of the State, and it is suggested that you make proclamation to that effect, and also that all necessary assistance will be given to you and the Legislature herein recognized to protect the State from disorder and violence.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

That pretended Legislature convened on the 9th, and here, only three days afterward, before the President could hear the other side at all, before he could hear anything but one side, he makes up his mind and the Attorney-General sends out that proclamation; and then, having made up his mind, it is all in vain for the true Legislature, the governor-elect, and the citizens to lay the real facts before him! This man's mind and edicts are like the laws of the Medes and Persians, right or wrong they are never to be altered. I have already stated that McEnery had petitioned to be heard, the conservative members of the Legislature asked to be heard, the people asked to be heard. They were not heard. Who was heard? Packard was heard; Casey, the brother-in-law of the President and the collector of customs, was heard; but the governor-elect, the executive officers-elect, the Legislature-elect, the committee of one hundred, representing thousands of the best citizens of Louisiana, were not heard at all before judgment was given. What was it produced the recognition of the usurping government? Sir, the whole thing is in a nutshell.

There is one most significant telegram which is the key to this whole business. It is a telegram sent here saying that the President must interfere in order to save the republican party of Louisiana. I will read it in a moment. The mind of the President was fixed certainly as early as the 12th of December, for then it is that he telegraphs that Pinchback and that Legislature are to be recognized and upheld. What fixed it? Here is a telegram from his brother-in-law, Casey, the collector, dated the 11th of the month:

The delay in placing troops at disposal of Governor Pinchback, in accordance with joint resolution of Monday—

That is, the joint resolution of the bogus Legislature—is disheartening our friends and cheering our enemies. If requisition of Legislature is complied with all difficulty will be dissipated, the party saved—

That is, the republican party—and everything go on smoothly.

That was the material thing—"the party will be saved;" and that was more potential in the mansion of the Chief Magistrate of this Republic than all that the officers elected by majorities of thousands could say, than all that the people of Louisiana, though represented by an imposing committee of one hundred of her most eminent citizens could lay before him. Those magic words, "the party will be saved," settled the mind of the President if it had not been settled before. If it was not settled when on the 3d day of that month the Attorney-General sent that remarkable telegram to Packard to enforce all decrees and mandates of the United States court by whomsoever resisted, and to call on General Emory for troops to enforce them, it was when he received this dispatch of the 11th of December that he should recognize that usurpation in order to save the party. Then certainly it became fixed, and it became unchangeable; and hence Mr. Attorney-General Williams, on the 13th, telegraphs to these people who were coming here with their humble petition to be heard—that was all, "to be heard," American citizens, men elected to the highest offices in a State Legislature, and citizens coming here and simply praying to be heard—telegraphs them as imperiously and as contumaciously as if he were the satrap of some Persian emperor, saying in substance, "You need not come here; the mind of the President is made up, and it is unchangeable." He would have no hearing of anything but the one side. The telegrams of the collector of customs and of the United States marshal and the significant declaration sustain Pinchback, sustain the Legislature, and you save the republican party, did the business; that did the work; that silenced every one else; that closed the Executive ear to all appeals, to all representations from any one who entertained a different opinion from that which he desired should prevail.

Here is another significant thing. Something has been said about the decisions of the supreme court of Louisiana. On the 12th day of December, and before any decision had been pronounced by that court or there was any case before it in which it could pronounce a decision, James F. Casey, the President's brother-in-law and the collector of customs at New Orleans, sent him a telegram urging Federal interference, urging the use of Federal troops, and in that dispatch he says:

The supreme court is known to be in sympathy with the republican State government.

The supreme court of Louisiana was known to be in sympathy with the republican State government; that is, with the usurping government. How was it that the supreme court of Louisiana was known, on the 12th day of December, before it had a case before it, much less before it had pronounced any decision, to be "in sympathy with the republican State government?" I do not think it is very difficult to find out when you come to look into the personnel of that court. The personnel of that court has been examined heretofore in the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin; but there is something that has come to light since then that deserves the attention of the people and of the Senate. Who was the chief justice of that court? The man who presided at the impeachment of Warmoth, and lent his power and influence to proceedings in violation of the constitution and law of that State; for no one can pretend that that impeachment proceeded in accordance with the constitution and the law? Who was the chief justice of that State who presided on that occasion? He was one Chief Justice Ludeling; and what manner of man is he? If any Senator wants to know what manner of man he is, let him refer to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivered at its present term, in which by name this Ludeling is denounced upon the clearest proof as being one of the most corrupt and fraudulent men to be found on the face of this Republic—a man engaged in fraud up to his eyes, fraud for which any lawyer would be debarred, fraud for which any judge would be impeached wherever there is purity of judicial administration. He is one of the men who are in sympathy with this "republican State government" and presiding at the pretended impeachment of Warmoth, upholding it by his pretended decision when afterward a case is got before his court, and going out of his jurisdiction and beyond the case in order to uphold it. No, sir; you cannot touch this case in any of its forms, in any of its proceedings; you cannot touch any person engaged in the usurpation that you do not touch pitch. Blackness is all around it; corruption in every step that was taken. No man can truthfully deny it.

Now, what pretense was there for upholding this Kellogg government? The pretense was that the people were cheated at the election, that there was fraud practiced or intimidation practiced upon the voters. Suppose that were true; suppose it were true to the full extent alleged, where was the tribunal and the place in which that fraud was to be tried? That tribunal was in Louisiana. Where were the constitution and the law under which it was to be tried? They were the constitution and the law of Louisiana. It was not to be tried elsewhere. It was to be tried according to that constitution and according to that law. It was not tried there; it was not tried according to that constitution and that law; but it was decided in the recess sof a judge's chamber at night by an illegal order made by him and executed by the Army of the United States, and that order never would have been made, that Army never would have been so used, if they had not well known beforehand that it was the decree at Washington that the Pinchback-Kellogg government was to be inaugurated and sustained. Durell has passed away. The other House of Congress resolved to impeach him and he escaped impeachment by resignation. Ludeling is convicted in the Supreme Court of the United States as being no better than a thief. Whether he will resign or be impeached, remains to be seen. One by one they pass away; but the usurpation is still maintained and the people of Louisiana who smart under it, who would not be American citizens if they did not smart under it, are denounced as "banditti" by a Lieutenant-General of the United States who proposes to restore peace in quite as summary way as order was ever restored at Warsaw.

Sir, I ask you if such a state of things as that was not calculated to produce irritation and bad feeling in Louisiana? I ask you if so plain and flagrant an usurpation was not calculated to stir the hearts of the people who suffered under it? What its effect was we know; but it is so well stated, so calmly, so dispassionately stated—stated, with such judicial accuracy and moderation, in the report of the subcommittee of the House of Representatives that visited New Orleans during this session of Congress—that, long as is the passage in that report, I ask that it be read. I send it to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The general condition of affairs in the State of Louisiana seems to be as follows: The conviction has been general among the whites since 1872 that the Kellogg government was a usurpation. This conviction among them has been strengthened by the acts of the Kellogg legislature abolishing existing courts and judges, and substituting others presided over by judges appointed by Kellogg, having extraordinary and exclusive jurisdiction over political questions; by changes in the laws, centralizing in the governor every form of political control, including the supervision of the elections; by continuing the returning board, with absolute power over the returns of elections; by the extraordinary provisions enacted for the trial of titles and claims to office; by the conversion of the police force, maintained at the expense of the city of New Orleans, into an armed brigade of State militia, subject to the command of the governor; by the creation in some places of monopolies in markets, gas-making, water-works, and ferries, cleaning vaults and removing filth, and doing work as wharfingers; by the abolition of courts with elective judges, and the substitution of other courts with judges appointed by Kellogg, in evasion of the constitution of the State; by enactments punishing criminally all persons who attempted to fill official positions unless returned by the returning board; by unlimited appropriations for the payment of militia expenses and for the payment of legislative warrants, vouchers, and checks, issued during the years 1870 and 1872; by laws declaring that no persons in arrears for taxes after default published shall bring any suit in any court of the State or be allowed to be a witness in his own behalf—measures which, when coupled with the extraordinary burdens of taxation, have served to vest, in the language of Governor Kellogg's counsel, "a degree of power in the governor of a State scarcely exercised by any sovereign in the world."

With this conviction is a general want of confidence in the integrity of the existing State and local officials—a want of confidence equally in their purposes and in their personnel—which is accompanied by the paralyzation of business and destruction of values. The most hopeful witness produced by the Kellogg party, while he declared that business was in a sounder condition than ever before, because there was less credit, has since declared that "there was no prosperity." The securities of the State have fallen in two years from 70 or 80 to 25; of the city of New Orleans, from 80 or 90 to 30 or 40, while the fall in bank shares, railway shares, city and other corporate companies, have in a degree corresponded. Throughout the rural districts of the State the negroes, reared in habits of reliance upon their masters for support, and in a community in which the members are always ready to divide the necessaries of life with each other, not regarding such action as very evil, and having immunity from punishment from the nature of the local officials, had come to filching and stealing fruit, vegetables, and poultry so generally—as Bishop Wilmarth stated without contradiction from any source—that the raising of these articles had to be entirely abandoned, to the great distress of the white people, while within the parishes, as well as in New Orleans, the taxation had been carried almost literally to the extent of confiscation. In New Orleans the assessors are paid a commission for the amount assessed, and houses and stores are to be had there for the taxes. In Natchitoches, the taxation reached about 8 per cent. of the assessed value on the property. In many parishes all the white republicans and all the office-holders belong to a single family. There are five of the Greens in office in Lincoln; there are seven of the Boults in office in Natchitoches. As the people saw taxation increase and prosperity diminish—as they grew poor, while officials grew rich—they became naturally sore. That they love their rulers cannot be pretended.

The Kellogg government claims to have reduced taxation. This has been effected in part by establishing a board to fund the debt of the State at 60 per cent. of its face value. This measure aroused great hostility, not so much because of the reduction of its acknowledged debt as because it gave to the funding board, whose powers seem to be absolute and without review, discretionary authority to admit to be funded some six millions of debt alleged to be fraudulent; so that, under the guise of reducing the acknowledged debt, it gave opportunity to swell the fraudulent debt against the State. This nominal reduction of the State taxes has been accompanied by a provision that the parish taxes shall not exceed the State. But the parishes have, notwithstanding, created liabilities. Judgments being recovered on these, the courts have directed taxes to be levied for their payment, and thus the actual taxes have been carried far beyond the authorized rates. Rings have been formed in parishes, composed of the parish officers, their relatives, and sometimes of co-operating democrats, who would buy up these obligations, put them in judgments, and cause them to be enforced, to the great distress of the neighborhood—a distress so general that the sales of lands for taxes have become almost absolutely impossible.

But the reduction of wages, the non-fulfillment of personal or political pledges, the misfeasance of some local officials, disputes among the leading colored persons in other localities, the loss or embezzlement in some cases of the school funds, and the failure of the Freedman's Bank, all combined to divide the views of colored voters during the late campaign. An effort was accordingly made by the conservatives to acquire a part of the negro vote; with that view it was sought in many quarters to propitiate them. Frequent arrests by the United States marshals for intimidation or threats of non-employment, and the apprehension that was felt that the returning board would count out their men if excuse for such a course were offered, all combined, especially after the 14th of September, to put the conservatives on their good behavior, and the result was that in November, 1874, the people of the State of Louisiana did fairly have a free, peaceable, and full registration and election, in which a clear conservative majority was elected to the lower house of the Legislature, of which majority the conservatives were deprived by the unjust, illegal, and arbitrary action of the returning board.

Mr. THURMAN. You have seen from this report of the committee of the other House of Congress what is the condition of things in Louisiana, and you have seen some of the causes of it stated with judicial fairness, and one among the chief is the conviction, nay I say the certainty, that they have been living under a usurpation for the last two years, and the further certainty that that usurpation has been distinguished by corruption and oppression in such a degree that no people on the face of this earth could be easy and contented under it. Why, sir, to say nothing about the corruption that exists, just think of one thing—just think of this fact:

The securities of the State have fallen in two years—that is, since Kellogg was inaugurated—from 70 or 80 to 25: of the city of New Orleans, from 80 or 90 to 30 or 40, while the fall in bank shares, railway shares, city and other corporate companies, have in a degree corresponded. Throughout the rural districts of the State the negroes, reared in habits of reliance upon their masters for support, and in a community in which the members are always ready to divide the necessaries of life with each other, not regarding such action as very evil, and having immunity from punishment from the nature of the local officials, had come to filching and stealing fruit, vegetables, and poultry so generally—as Bishop Wilmarth stated without contradiction from any source—that the raising of these articles had to be entirely abandoned, to the great distress of the white people, while within the parishes, as well as in New Orleans, the taxation had been carried almost literally to the extent of confiscation. In New Orleans the assessors are paid a commission for the amount assessed, and houses and stores are to be had there for the taxes.

That is, you can have among the best of the dwelling-houses in New Orleans, among the best of the stores, without any other rent than the payment of the taxes. But that is not all.

In Natchitoches, the taxation reached about 8 per cent. of the assessed value on the property.

Eight per cent. of the assessed value, and yet the people of Natchitoches are expected to be very quiet and contented! With a taxation more than five times the average taxation in the State of Ohio bearing upon that depressed people, they are expected to be quiet and contented; and if they are not quiet and contented, a Lieutenant-General of the Army of the United States proposes that the President shall proclaim that they are "banditti" and then nothing more will be necessary than the duty that will devolve on him! Ah, sir, I never expected to live to see the day, in what was once called free America, in what was once called a republic, when such things as these could take place and any man who called himself a freeman or a lover of liberty and of free institutions could stand up to defend or even to palliate them. But, sir, I must pass on.

There was another election for the Legislature in 1874. The people of Louisiana had submitted. But they determined to make one more effort to rid themselves by the free and peaceable action of the ballot-box from usurpation and misgovernment. There were men among them who were disheartened; many of them were disheartened; hundreds, nay thousands of them, said: "It is of no use; let us go to the polls as much as we please; let us elect our candidates by as great majorities as we please; let us have a clear majority of both branches of the Assembly, it will do us no good, for the same scenes of fraud and usurpation that took place two years ago will be repeated, and the same military arm that supported the usurpation then, nay that inaugurated it, will support the new usurpation." That is what was said by thousands of voters last fall in the State of Louisiana. But what said the leaders of the conservative party? They appealed to the voters not to give way to despair; they appealed to them not to give way to despondency; they appealed to them to make one more manly and true effort to rescue their State from the misgovernment that prevailed, to rescue it from the usurpation that was there, to elect a majority of the Legislature of the State and thus rescue it from the maladministration by which it was oppressed and the ruin that threatened it.

I remember, sir, seeing those appeals. I remember perfectly well the effect they had on my mind, when the leading men of the conservative party of the State had to beseech the voters not to give way to despair, but to believe that wrong and violence could not always triumph, and that if they did succeed in the election, did succeed in electing a majority of the General Assembly, that majority would be regularly installed in their seats and then all would be well. At last the voters of the State listened to these appeals; men threw off their despair and despondency; they went to the polls; and the result was the election of a house of representatives in which the conservatives had twenty-nine majority and the election of a senate in which they also had a majority, I believe, but a small one. I may be mistaken about the senate. I am not so sure about it; but as to the house there is no mistake. The fact is found in the report of the committee of your House of Representatives, and it is abundantly evidenced otherwise.

Why is it that what republicans call the house of representatives of Louisiana is in the hands of the radicals? Why is it that those twenty-nine conservative majority are not in their seats in the house of representatives of Louisiana? It is simply because the same kind of frauds that were perpetrated two years ago have been repeated now, and the same mighty military arm that upheld them then upholds them again. There is no other reason for it on the face of the earth. A pretended fraudulent returning board two years ago, supported by the military of the United States under the orders of the President, established usurpation in Louisiana, and now another fraudulent returning board has counted out twenty-nine conservative majority in the house of representatives, and the Army of the United States is sustaining that usurpation and imposing upon the people of that State another government which they never chose to rule over them; and yet it is expected that they shall all be very tame and quiet and peaceful and love the Government that does these things, love the Government that thus overrules their will and thus tramples upon every principle of free institutions in their midst and to their great wrong and injury. And now an attempt is made to divert public attention from this enormity of counting out, in plain violation of law, a majority of 29 and returning a majority on the other side, and an attempt is made to palliate it by caviling about the mode in which the house of representatives was organized, by sticking in the bark; I will not say by pettifogging, for that would be an offensive word, but by sticking in the bark about whether there was perfect regularity in the organization of the house of representatives on the 4th day of this month in New Orleans.

I might admit that it was not regular, and yet what is the Senate of the United States to think of what occurred? Suppose that the five men who were expelled by the United States soldiers had taken part in that organization from the very beginning, even in the choice of Wiltz as temporary speaker, where would have been the wrong done? Were they not elected? No man denies it. The returning board does not deny it, for it was bound to decide against them if they were not elected. By not deciding against them it admitted that they had at least a prima facie case. The official returns showed them elected, and no official body had decided that they were not elected. They had then what made a clear prima facie case, and at the back of that they had, some of them, more than 1,000 majority. Suppose they had taken part in that organization, where would have been the wrong or the injustice of the thing? Would it not have been a part taken by the chosen representatives of the people; and would not the fact of their election, the fact that they had the certificates, which by the very law were prima facie evidence of their rights to seats there, have overridden, in the estimation of any man capable of considering a legal, much less a political question, all matters of mere formal regularity in the organization of the house?

But, sir, I am not driven to any such position as that. I say that those five men had as much right to take part in the organization of that house from the very beginning, and to vote, as I have to take part in the proceedings of this Senate; that they had under the constitution and laws of Louisiana a clear, undeniable right to take part there. Why had they not? The only thing that has been urged to show that they had no such right is a clause in the election law of Louisiana of 1872. That act provides for a returning board, and it provides that the returning board shall deliver a list of the members of assembly elect to the secretary of state, and he shall transmit a list of the senators to the secretary of the senate and a list of the members of the house to the clerk of the last house of representatives; and it further provides that in the organization of that house of representatives the members on that list and none others shall take part. It is upon that provision of the law of 1872, that the members on that list and none others shall take part in the organization of the house, that the whole argument is based to show that Wiltz was not elected speaker and that the organization with him as speaker was a usurpation. Nobody yet has denied that he was elected a member of that house; nobody has yet denied that he had a right to be there and take part in its organization; and why he should be denounced as he has been for simply endeavoring to carry out the will of the people of his State as manifested in the election, according to the usage of legislative bodies almost time out of mind, is past my comprehension.

Let us see whether or not there is anything in that provision of the law which made the act that resulted in the choice of Wiltz as speaker unconstitutional and illegal. In order to understand this, it will be necessary for me to state as briefly as I can what is the election law of that State. It is the act of 1872, which is in almost every particular the same as the act of 1870 of the same State. It provides that there shall be in each parish (which, as I have before remarked, is the same as a county in other States) a supervisor of registration, who is to superintend the registration of the voters in that parish. It then provides that there shall be a suitable number of polls or voting places in each parish, and that the election shall be held under the supervision of three judges of election, who are called commissioners of election. It further provides that after the votes have been received these commissioners of election in each voting precinct are immediately to count the votes and make a return of the number of votes cast for each candidate, and the office for which he was a candidate, and that they are to swear to the truth of that return, and then seal it up and deliver it or cause it to be delivered to the supervisor of registration in that parish, and a duplicate thereof to the clerk of the district court. Then, within twenty-four hours from the receipt of the returns by the supervisor of registration, he is to make a consolidated return as it is called; that is, he is to compile the returns, putting the various precincts together, so as to show by a consolidated return what is the vote in that parish. That makes the return of the whole parish. He does precisely the same thing which in Ohio is done by the the clerk of the court and two justices of the peace, taking the returns from each township and making an abstract of the whole vote of the county. That the supervisor of registration is to do.

Then he is to send that consolidated return, and also the original returns, to the returning board at the seat of government; but before he sends it, it is to be certified as true by the clerk of the district court of the parish. The law does not trust the supervisor of registration alone. He has to take to his assistance the clerk of the district court, and that clerk must certify, as well as the supervisor of registration, that that return is true.

But that is not the whole of the law. The law further provides, in its twenty-sixth section, as follows:

SEC. 26. Be it further enacted, &c., That in any parish, precinct, ward, city, or town in which during the time of registration or revision of registration, or on any day of election, there shall be any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation and disturbance, bribery or corrupt influences, at any place within said parish, or at or near any poll or voting place, or place of registration or revision of registration, which riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation and disturbance, bribery or corrupt influences shall prevent, or tend to prevent, a fair, free, peaceable, and full vote of all the qualified electors of said parish, precinct, ward, city, or town, it shall be the duty of the commissioners of election, if such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation and disturbance, bribery or corrupt influences occur on the day of election, or of the supervision of registration of the parish, if they occur during the time of registration or revision of registration, to make in duplicate and under oath a clear and full statement of all the facts relating thereto, and of the effect produced by such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation and disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences in preventing a fair, free, peaceable, and full registration or election, and of the number of qualified electors deterred by such riots, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation and disturbance, bribery or corrupt influences from registering or voting, which statement shall also be corroborated under oath by three respectable citizens, qualified electors of the parish. When such statement is made by a commissioner of election or a supervisor of registration, he shall forward it in duplicate to the supervisor of registration of the parish, if in the city of New Orleans, to the secretary of state, one copy of which, if made to the supervisor of registration, shall be forwarded by him to the returning officers provided for in section 2 of this act, when he makes the returns of election in his parish. His copy of said statement shall be so annexed to his returns of elections by paste, wax, or some adhesive substance, that the same can be kept together, and the other copy the supervisor of registration shall deliver to the clerk of the court of his parish for the use of the district attorney.

What then is the duty of the returning board? The returning board is a body of five men to be elected by the senate of the State, from all political parties as the law declares, and it is their duty to receive these parish returns made by the supervisors of registration and then to proceed to compile them and make an abstract and declare who are the persons elected. What is their duty in making hat compilation under this law? They are first to compile the returns to which there is no certificate of violence or obstruction of any kind. That is, when they take up the return from a parish and look at it and see that it is not accompanied by any protest from the commissioners of election or supervisor of registration, it is their duty to compile it as the law says; that is, to count that and put it down. They have no right whatever to go into any inquiry originating with themselves. Their sole jurisdiction to institute an inquiry is where there comes up with the return this protest or certificate of the commissioners of election or supervisor of registration that a full, free, and fair election was obstructed in one of the ways pointed out by the twenty-sixth section.

Mr. CONKLING. You ignore the proviso at the end of the section?

Mr. THURMAN. What section?

Mr. CONKLING. The section of which you are speaking of the election law of Louisiana.

Mr. WEST. Section 3.

Mr. CONKLING. The same section of which the Senator from Ohio is speaking.

Mr. THURMAN. Let us see whether I ignore anything. The proviso is:

Provided. That any person interested in said election by reason of being a candidate for office shall be allowed a hearing before said returning officers upon making application within the time allowed for the forwarding of the returns of said election.

Is that what you mean? It has no more to do with their inaugurating an examination where there is no certificate from the commissioners of election or supervisor of registration than it has to do with my speaking on this floor. It simply gives the party a right to a hearing, not to inaugurate a contest there.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator was ignoring it.

Mr. THURMAN. It is enough to make anybody ignore that proviso when it clearly enough has nothing to do with the question before us. Under precisely the same law in substance—for the section in the act of 1870 is substantially the same—your own Committee of Privileges and Elections decided, and without a dissenting voice, that there was no right whatsoever to go into any examination as to an election at any poll unless there came up a certificate of violence, &c., a protest with the return; and they decided right, because that proviso has nothing whatsoever to do with the question of introducing original testimony but simply gives a party who may be interested a right to be heard—not a right to introduce testimony; not a right to inaugurate a case of contested election before these returning officers; and it would be a very funny thing—would it not?—the idea that the governor of a State is to inaugurate a contest before the returning board; that members of the Legislature are to inaugurate a contest before the returning board, when the constitution declares that the votes for governor shall be counted by the General Assembly, and that each house of the Assembly shall be the judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its members. Nothing of the kind ever was intended.

Mr. CONKLING. Will it incommode the Senator if I ask him to allow me to understand him at that point?

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know that it will.

Mr. CONKLING. I inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether we are to understand him to maintain that the force and scope of the proviso of the third section which he has been discussing is filled and satisfied if parties interested are allowed to be heard merely, with no right to introduce testimony, with no right to present to the board anything upon which the board can act, but literally and only "to be heard?" I understand the Senator so to maintain, and if that is his understanding, I should be glad to be sure that I apprehend him correctly.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not see how anybody can have any doubt about it, so far as the question before us is concerned. Suppose they have a right to introduce testimony, in what cases have they such right?

Mr. CONKLING. If my honorable friend will pardon me, I did not mean to tax him so far; I only wanted to know whether he maintained that they had no right to introduce testimony? What the effect may be is another question.

Mr. THURMAN. I have this to say about it: that in no case whatsoever can one word of testimony be introduced except where there comes a protest, as it is called, or a certificate of the commissioners of election or supervisor of registration that there was fraud or violence or the like; and when there is such a case as that, then it may be that they are authorized to go on and take testimony. But their duty is in the first place to inspect the certificate and the affidavits of the three persons, and if they think upon such inspection that no case is made for throwing out the poll, then they are not to throw it out, but they are to compile it, to count it. If there is good reason to believe that there was fraud or violence which interfered with a fair election, then they may go on and summon witnesses, take further testimony; and it may be that in such case as that parties might be heard. I do not say whether they would or not. I do not know what the practice is that may have given an interpretation to the law; but of one thing I am perfectly sure, that they cannot take one particle of testimony against a return unless there comes up with that return this certificate of the commissioners of election or supervisor of registration. That is the only case.

That being so, how was it with these five members? Here was the returning board. It was their duty to compile all returns and put on the list of members the names of the persons elected from every parish where there was no such official protest against their election. And here were the five men in question, elected according to the official returns, and no contest of or protest against their election. Plainly the returning board was bound by the law to place their names on the list of members-elect.

But let us look further. These five men were James Brice, jr., of Bienville; Charles Schuyler, of De Soto, and John Scales, of De Soto; C. C. Dunn, of Grant, and George A. Kelley, of Winn. Were they elected or not? Were Schuyler and Scales elected? Why, they had more than 1,000 majority, as reported by the committee of the House, from whose report I have already read, and there was not one particle of protest or certificate of violence, &c., attached to any return that came up from that parish. How was it with C. C. Dunn, of Grant, and George A. Kelley, of Winn? Kelley's majority was 240. I have not Dunn's before me. Those were the five men; two of them elected by over 1,000 majority, another elected by 240, and the others elected by majorities that I have not seen, but I believe they were large. There was not accompanying the returns of those parishes one single word of protest.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator say there was a return from De Soto?

Mr. THURMAN. A return of the election? Yes.

Mr. WEST. Where do you get that fact?

Mr. THURMAN. Tell me why there was not a return from De Soto?

Mr. CONKLING. I am advised there was none; for what reason I cannot say.

Mr. THURMAN. Now, let us see whether there were returns from De Soto or not. I am very glad to have that matter looked at. The House committee say in their report:

> So in the parish of De Soto, in which the returns showed a conservative elected by over 1,000 majority, it was alleged that the supervisor of registration had brought the returns from New Orleans, and had left them with a woman of bad character, who offered to produce them on payment of $1,000.

He was a lovely supervisor of registration! They could not beat the conservatives in any other way than by handing the returns to such a recipient as that.

> The conservative committee took legal proceedings to compel their production; but the court held that it had no jurisdiction to that end.

They have lovely courts down there. When it is necessary to decide in favor of the radical party, they can assume any jurisdiction that is wanted; when it is necessary to compel the production of a paper that the party holding it has no right to and which the public have an interest in, the court has no jurisdiction! What then did the conservative committee do?

> They then caused to be produced before the board the duplicate of those returns from the office of the secretary of state, together with the tally-sheets, poll-lists, &c., filed there according to law. These duplicates corresponded exactly with the alleged result of the compiled returns which the said woman had produced; and of these alleged facts undisputed proof was also submitted to the board. Nevertheless the board refused to count the vote for that parish.

Sir, the returning board did have the returns and a duplicate and "undisputed proof," and yet they threw out the parish. No comment can be necessary upon an act so indefensible and infamous.

They rejected that parish on no pretense whatever that there was any fraud or violence, &c., in the election there; no pretense whatever that there was any intimidation there. Without one single word of protest or contest they threw out the two members from that parish, or refused to put them on the list of members-elect; but with all their hardihood they did not dare to decide that they were not elected. They said nothing about that at all, but simply omitted them from the list. I will presently come to the effect of this proceeding.

> So in Winn Parish, where 404 conservative and 164 republican votes were cast, upon a verbal protest that the registrar of elections was not properly qualified, of which the only proof was that he had failed to forward his oath of office to the secretary of state—although there was no pretense that the election was not a fair representation of the will of the people—the whole vote of the parish was rejected and the case referred to the Legislature.

That is another one of these cases. Suppose the registrar had not forwarded a copy of his oath to the secretary of state, it would have been an omission of a mere ministerial act. Every lawyer knows that it did not in the slightest degree affect his right to hold the office; and every man who ever acted upon a contested-election case knows that such cases are not to be decided upon such figments as that; and yet without any protest, without any pretense of an unfair election, that man was not certified or was left out.

What was the legal effect of this? Now I ask the attention of the Senate to this provision of the law. Here is a section upon which so much reliance is placed, and has excited so much indignation over these five elected members because they dared to appear on that floor; these intruders and scoundrels, as they have been called, whom any citizen of the State of Louisiana, my colleague said, if called on by Governor Kellogg, might have lawfully expelled from that hall. I should like to know where Governor Kellogg got the authority to expel from the hall of the house of representatives of Louisiana five men legally elected and who were there claiming their seats. I should like to know what my colleague would think if Governor Allen, of Ohio, were to assume the power to send a posse comitatus into the General Assembly of Ohio to take out five republican members because he said, forsooth, that some little technicality had not been complied with in the organization of the house. What would the republican party of Ohio think of that? No, Mr. President, that will not do. What was this law? Let us see:

> SEC. 44. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to transmit to the clerk of the house of representatives and the secretary of the senate of the last General Assembly a list of the names of such persons as, according to the returns, shall have been elected to either branch of the General Assembly; and it shall be the duty of the said clerk and secretary to place the names of the representatives and senators elect so furnished upon the roll of the house and of the senate, respectively; and those representatives and senators whose names are so placed by the clerk and secretary respectively, in accordance with the foregoing provisions, and none other, shall be competent to organize the house of representatives or senate.

That is what is relied upon to show that the organization was illegal, because the names of these five persons were not on that roll thus furnished by the secretary of state. But my colleague forgot to read what follows:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with article 34 of the constitution of the State.

Right in that very section, in the very next sentence after that which my colleague read, which says that none but those on the roll shall participate in the organization of the house, is the provision that nothing in the act shall be construed to conflict with article 34 of the constitution. What is article 34 of the constitution? It is that—

> Each house of the General Assembly shall judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of its members; but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

Here is the provision which shows what may be done by law. The mode of contesting an election may be provided by law, but so far as the judgment upon the election, qualifications, and returns of the members is concerned, each house is sovereign judge for itself. The consequence is that this whole law is unconstitutional so far as it interferes with that right, and so your committee decided upon the act of 1870, which was precisely the same in every material particular. Let us see what they decided. Speaking of the act of 1870, they said:

> This act is in conflict with the constitution in several particulars: First, the constitution provides that the return of the election of all the members of the Legislature shall be made to the secretary of state, (see article 46)—

This act sends their returns to the returning board—

> and article 48 provides that the returns of every election for governor and lieutenant-governor shall be sealed up and transmitted to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives then next to be holden, and that the members of the General Assembly—that is, both houses of the Legislature—shall meet in the house of representatives to examine and count the votes for governor and lieutenant-governor
> The act provides that the returns shall be made to the governor, and that the governor, the lieutenant-governor, the secretary of state, and John Lynch and T. C. Anderson, or a majority of them, shall be returning officers for all elections in the State; that they shall examine, canvass, and count the votes, and determine who has been elected governor and to other State offices and who members of the Legislature. The act provides a totally different machinery from that provided by the constitution for the safe-keeping, examination, and count of the votes for governor and lieutenant-governor. The act, in so far as it provides that Lynch and Anderson shall be members of said canvassing board, is in conflict with the provisions of the constitution in relation to appointments to office.

I have seldom in my life seen an act more plainly in violation of a constitution than is this act in violation of the constitution of the State of Louisiana. Let us see what it would lead to. The constitution provides that each parish in that State shall have at least one representative. The number of representatives to which the State is entitled is one hundred and eleven. It further provides, as I have said, that the house is to be the judge of the election, qualifications, and returns—mark it, "returns"—of its own members. Now, this law provides that this returning board shall make out a list of the members-elect, and it shall send that list to the secretary of state, and the secretary of state shall deliver it to the clerk of the last house of representatives; and then, says the act, those persons who are named on that list, and none others, shall take part in the organization of the house. Now, here were one hundrd and eleven men elected at the last election of Louisiana. This board certified to the election of one hundred and six of them. There are different statements as to the politics of the one hundred and six I believe the committee of the house found that fifty-three of them were supposed to be republicans and fifty-three democrats; but the sworn statement of Wiltz and others, who are better acquainted with their politics, shows that fifty-four of them were republicans and fifty-two democrats. That made one hundred and six. Then the board made no return at all as to five of them, the five members in question. It did not decide against them, it did not decide for them, but simply omitted them from the list. There was not a particle of contest for the seat of either of them; there was no protest coming up from any poll in their parishes, nothing of that kind at all; but they simply omitted those five; and now it is said that that omission by that board of those men, who had prima facie evidence of their election, and against whom there was no protest whatsoever, excluded those five men from any part in the organization of the house; that that mere omission by that returning board, which I shall presently show was a violation of their sworn duty to put those five men down on that list, made those five men intruders there, and an officer of the United States Army was thereupon authorized to come in and take them out between files of soldiers with their bayonets fixed. That is republican government, forsooth.

But to proceed with the law. When this same provision, that they and none other shall take part in the organization of that house, is read in connection with the further provision, that "nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with article 34 of the constitution," this provision that none others than those named in that list shall take part in that organization of the house becomes really and utterly nugatory; or if any effect can be given to it at all, it can only be that the house can decide in all cases who, having the proper parish certificates of election, are entitled to participate, unless the returning board has decided against them and thereby counteracted the prima facie case. There is no other way of construing that provision in the act and making it constitutional. But let us see to what an absurdity the construction contended for by my colleague would lead. If this board could exclude five men from taking part in that organization simply by leaving them off the list, five men whose seats were not contested, five men against the election of whom not one single word had been uttered, five men the returns of whose election came up without one word of protest, without one line of a certificate that there had been any fraud, intimidation, or violence—if they simply by leaving off the names of these five men from the list could exclude them from taking part in the organization, they might just as well have left off fifty men. The power to do the one is just as great as the power to do the other. In that way they might have turned that house over into the hands of fifty men, nay, into the hands of ten men. There is no end to the absurdity of such a thing as that. If these men by arbitrarily leaving off the names of members could prevent them from organization, I would like to know what they could not do, or how the Legislature of Louisiana is to be organized at all. I remember when the Senator from New York, who is now taking notes, [Mr. CONKLING,] was last sworn in he had no credentials here at all. We took it for granted that he would not ask to be sworn in unless he had been duly elected, and without any credentials at all he was sworn in. My colleague might just as well have said that President Grant might have ordered a file of soldiers down here and turned him out; that he was an intruder; that his name was not on the list. The credentials of all the other Senators had been presented and their names were on the list of the Secretary at his desk, and they were called up two by two and four by four to be sworn, but the Senator from New York, like the foolish virgin, had no oil in his cruse. [Laughter.] But there was his friend the Ex-Vice-President, [Mr. HAMLIN,] who sat next to him, and who got up and said, "I have known a Senator to be sworn in on common rumor that he was elected, who said he was elected and we believed him, and the same courtesy is due to the Senator from New York." We all said "Amen," and he was sworn in; but according to this new doctrine it would have been perfectly competent for President Grant, if the Senator from New York had been a democrat, to have sent in a couple of files of soldiers and marched him out between fixed bayonets. That will not do at all. You cannot stick in the bark in that way.

Now I want to call the attention of the Senate to what was the duty of this returning board, in order to show that they could not perform their duty and abridge the privileges of that house. Their duty was to compile all the returns. It is put down in the law as plainly as can be that they are to decide upon every case. It is put down again and again; it is put down as if it was per industria that they should decide. They are not to leave anything undecided. They are to decide whether to count the vote of a parish or poll, or whether to reject it. They cannot leave it without deciding one way or the other. If they leave it to the house, as they call it, then it is precisely as if there were no law for their making any returns at all; and I will come to that in a moment. Perhaps I had better speak of that now. Suppose these men, instead of returning one hundred and six names on the list, had returned none at all? They would have fulfilled their duty just as well as they did. They left off five men whose seats were not contested, against the taking of whose seats there was not a word of protest, and they might just as well have left off the whole one hundred and eleven. Suppose they had done so, would that have deprived the house of representatives of Louisiana of an organization? Could that house not have organized? Could the board have annihilated the house by refusing to put the names of fifty-six men on the roll, and thus left fifty-five, which would have been less than a quorum; for it took fifty-six to make a quorum? If they could not do that, if the effect of doing that would have been, as all must admit, to remit the house to its rights under the constitution to decide for itself, why was not that right remitted to the house in respect to these five members?

But let us see if I am right as to the duty of the board. Section 2 of the statute says:

> That five persons, to be elected by the senate from all political parties, shall be the returning officers for all elections in the State.

Not for part of the elections, not for the election of one hundred and six members, and not for the remaining five members, but they shall be the returning officers for all elections in the State. Then what is the oath they take?

> I, A B, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully and diligently perform the duties of a returning officer as prescribed by law; that I will carefully and honestly canvass and compile the statements of the votes, and make a true and correct return of the election: so help me God.

They swear to "carefully and honestly canvass and compile the statements of the votes." Here were the statements from Bienville, from Caddo, from Winn, from De Soto, and from Grant. There were the statements from five parishes, and each one of those men swore before Almighty God that he would carefully compile those statements according to the law, and the law required them to put the names of the five men in question on the list of members-elect unless there came up a protest against their election; and there was no such protest. That is the oath that they took. Were they authorized to neglect that duty? Was it in their discretion to perform it or not to perform it? Was it in their discretion to perform it as to a part of the members and not to perform it as to the rest? No man can truthfully say so. They were bound to compile all the returns and decide upon every case. But it does not stop there. What further were they to do? The statute says:

> Within ten days after the closing of the election said returning officers shall meet in New Orleans to canvass and compile the statements of votes made by the commissioners of election, and make returns of the election to the secretary of state. They shall continue in session until such returns have been compiled.

They are directed positively to continue in session until all the returns have been compiled. They cannot stop short. They say these returns are not compiled from these five parishes. Then they violated their duty, for their oath required them, and the law required them, there to remain until all the returns were compiled. That is not all, sir. The act further provides:

> One copy of such returns they shall file in the office of the secretary of state, and of one copy they shall make public proclamation by printing in the official journal and such other newspapers as they may deem proper, declaring the names of all persons and officers voted for—

Not all persons and officers elected, but all persons and officers voted for—

> The number of votes for each person and the names of the persons who have been duly and lawfully elected.

That is the return they are to make to the secretary of state, and which they are also to promulgate by proclamation in a newspaper. They are to give the names of all persons and officers voted for, the number of votes for each person, and the names of the persons who have been duly and lawfully elected. They did not do any such thing as to five men. Had they done it as to these five men, that would have shown them to have been elected. They did not do it. And the pretense now is that their omission to do that sworn duty deprived these five men of a right to a place on that floor and to take part in the organization of that house. I repeat, that they were required to decide in every case, upon every poll. That is the plain intent of the law. They must either reject the poll or they must count it. There can be no half-way business about it under that law; and when there comes up no certificate of fraud, intimidation, violence, &c., they cannot reject the poll. That was precisely the case in respect of these five parishes. Can any lawyer doubt for one moment that those men had a right in that body; that the parish returns made a prima facie case in their favor? I put it to my friend from New York whether, under that law, those parish returns did not make a prima facie case before that returning board. There they were. There was no objection to their regularity, no protest, no certificate of fraud, intimidation, violence, &c.; nothing of that kind. They were just as regular as any returns that were before that board, and I ask the Senator, that being the case, if that did not make a prima facie case which entitled those men to have their names put upon the roll? If they had that prima facie case before that returning board, they had an equally strong prima facie case before the house, which, by the constitution, was the sole judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its members. That is the truth of it, sir; and that is the whole of this case, so far as their right is concerned. Those five men had as much right there as you have to occupy that seat, and no special pleading, no sticking in the bark, no reading from parliamentary rules or the like can deprive them of that right, or can hide the solid, substantial justice of their title and the enormity of the act by which they were deprived of it.

But my colleague thinks it was a horrible thing that Mr. Vigers, the late clerk of the house, was not allowed to preside there and organize the house. I would like to know where he got the authority from for Mr. Vigers to organize that house. He was not clerk of that house; he was clerk of a defunct house. What right had he there? Why, he had no right at all there, as to that matter. What right could Mr. Vigers have? If he had any right, it was simply to call the roll. The law does not even provide that, I think.

Mr. GORDON. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. THURMAN. It does not even provide that he shall call the roll. Section 44—I will read the whole section—provides:

That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to transmit to the clerk of the house of representatives and the secretary of the senate of the last General Assembly a list of the names of such persons as, according to the returns, shall have been elected to either branch of the General Assembly; and it shall be the duty of the said clerk and secretary to place the names of the representatives and senators elect so furnished upon the roll of the house and of the senate, respectively; and those representatives and senators whose names are so placed by the clerk and secretary, respectively, in accordance with the foregoing provisions, and none other, shall be competent to organize the house of representatives or senate. Nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with article 34 of the constitution of the State.

Now, I would like to know where is the authority for Mr. Vigers there. He had no more right there than any other citizen of Louisiana had. He had no right to call that roll except by the grace and permission of the members there. The law contemplated that there was to be a roll of the senate, a roll of the house of representatives; rolls that belonged to the archives of the senate or of the house. The house might have declared that that roll should be called by any member of the house. Mr. Vigers had no legal right to call it, and it was simply by the grace of the house that he was permitted to call it at all.

It is suggested to me that there is some law that he is to hold over until his successor is elected. That gives him no right to call that roll; that gives him no right to preside at all. How are houses of Assembly organized? How was the house of representatives organized before there was any law passed upon the subject? I can recollect perfectly well how it was in the house of representatives in my State before the passage of any act of the Legislature upon the subject. The oldest member always called the house of representatives to order in the olden time. Lewis Williams, of North Carolina, regularly, session after session, called the House of Representatives of the United States to order, and then they went on and elected a Speaker, and a Clerk, and the like.

In my own State the oldest member of the Legislature, or he who had served before, one or the other, just as it happened, just as they agreed among themselves, called the house to order, and they proceeded to organize; and it was not until after the difficulty that occurred in the organization of the house of representatives in 1848—not in the administration of Mr. Van Buren, as I erroneously and through a lapse of the tongue stated on a former occasion—it was not until after that occurrence that provision was made in Ohio, and then it was made in the new constitution of the State, so that it might be binding. It was not thought for a moment that you could pass a law which should deprive the house of its constitutional right to judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its members, but the provision was put in the constitution of the State itself, which regulated the organization of the house, and of the senate too.

This, then, Mr. President, is the case in a nut-shell. That these five men were elected cannot be denied; that the returns from the parishes showed they were elected cannot be denied; that there was no protest against their election accompanying those returns cannot be denied; that that made a prima facie case which made it the imperative and sworn duty of that returning board to put them on the list cannot be denied; and that their omission to perform that duty could not affect the rights of those members or the right of the house to recognize them as members is another thing that no lawyer can deny. So much for that. Well, sir, Wiltz was chosen temporary speaker. Then what took place? If there had been any irregularity in his choice, all that irregularity was cured by the fact, by the undeniable fact, that more than a quorum of that body took part in its proceedings before these five men were expelled. In order to prove that, although it is somewhat tedious, I shall have to ask that the statement of the occurrences as they took place may be read, that we may have a full history of this matter. I will say that this statement is fortified by the affidavits of Mr. Wiltz, Mr. Maginnis, and Mr. Booth, members of that house. And after the Clerk reads it, I ask that there may also be read what is contained in this document in regard to the pretended organization of the republican house, beginning on page 3 and ending on page 6.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

After the completion of the roll-call by William Vigers, clerk of the former house, as provided by section 44, above recited, L. A. Wiltz was nominated as temporary chairman by a member, and was upon a viva voce vote declared elected temporary speaker, whereupon he took the chair, and announced himself temporary speaker of the house of representatives, and as such took his oath of office before Judge Houston, and also had said oath administered to him by a member. He thereupon administered the oaths to the members of the house. He then declared the functions of the former clerk, Vigers, at an end. A clerk was then, on motion, nominated and elected. A sergeant-at-arms and assistants were also elected.

During this temporary organization, upon motion put and adopted, the five members whose elections the returning board had not promulgated and had referred to the house were admitted as members and sworn in. Thereafter L. A. Wiltz was nominated as permanent speaker. The roll was called, and Wiltz and Hahn being in nomination, Wiltz received 55 votes, Hahn 2, and 1 blank. Fifty-six being a majority and legal quorum of the whole number, one hundred and eleven, to which the house was entitled, he was thereupon declared duly elected permanent speaker, and was sworn in and then administered the oath to the members, (by fours,) including Michael Hahn, Thomas Baker, Murrell, and Drury, republicans. A committee on credentials was then appointed, of which Hahn and Thomas were appointed members and accepted, and withdrew with the committee. Upon the return to the house of said committee, Hahn made known that he would make a minority report.

About this time, resistance being made to the sergeant-at-arms of the house, and there being great danger of violence and bloodshed, the force of the sergeant-at-arms consisting of only some ten men, the State-house being crowded on the inside and outside with metropolitan police and other unruly persons, said police on the outside being supported by a large array of United States soldiers, the speaker, upon motion of Dupre, a member of the house, put and carried, requested General De Trobriand, who had previously entered the State-house, accompanied by some United States troops, without the knowledge or request of the speaker, to speak a few words to the persons in the lobby, the speaker expressing the opinion that the general's remonstrance would prevent a riot, which was imminent. The general complied with the request, and, without the use of any force, restored comparative quiet in the lobby. No other intervention by the United States authorities was asked for or obtained. This request was made, as above stated, after the general and some soldiers had entered the room.

About an hour after this, order being fully restored, General De Trobriand returned, and informed the speaker that he had been ordered by Governor Kellogg to replace Vigers as clerk and to eject the five members above referred to, upon whose cases the returning board had failed to report, and desired to know whether his orders would be complied with without the use of force. The speaker replied that he was the lawful speaker of the house of representatives of the State of Louisiana and would obey no order from Governor Kellogg, or any other source, unless compelled so to do by actual overpowering force; whereupon the general retired and soon returned with soldiers and requested the speaker to point out the members indicated in his order from Kellogg for ejectment, the general not knowing them personally. This request was also promptly refused; whereupon General Campbell and T. C. Anderson, the former general of Kellogg's militia, by which he was surrounded in and out of the State-house, the latter a member of the Wells returning board, neither being members of the House, were called upon, and pointed out the desired members, who were thereupon seized, each by United States soldiers, with guns and fixed bayonets, and were forced out of the State-house against their oft-repeated protests.

Immediately upon this action by the military authorities of the United States the speaker requested the conservative members to retire with him, which was done without exception. General De Trobriand then ordered Mr. Vigers to call the roll, whereupon Speaker Wiltz reiterated his refusal to allow him to make such call, Vigers persisting, Wiltz had him forcibly ejected by his sergeant-at-arms. During all of these proceedings, the speaker reiterated his protests and refusals to submit to any interference unless compelled by over whelming force. Such force was used by the United States military authorities, and to it alone he yielded.

Mr. THURMAN. My colleague dwelt with great force upon what he said was a violation of the rights of the majority, as he termed it there, in this: that a call for the yeas and nays was decided to be out of order. I will show in a moment that the yeas and nays could not be called, and that the decisions are all against it. Perhaps I might as well do it at once and dispose of it now. There could not be a call of the yeas and nays before the organization of the house, and therefore that call was premature. It is a precisely parallel case to that of the House of Representatives when Mr. John Quincy Adams, as temporary chairman, just as Wiltz was temporary chairman at first, decided that there could not be a call for the yeas and nays. That decision of Mr. Adams, which no one can doubt was sound parliamentary law, is a full and complete justification for that refusal to entertain a call for the yeas and nays. But, good heavens, Mr. President, has it come to this, that if a temporary president or speaker in a State Assembly shall make an erroneous ruling upon a question of order, on a question whether the yeas and nays are demandable, that that shall authorize a brigadier-general of the Army of the United States to enter that hall and take him out of his seat, and eject five members from their seats? Has it come to be the constitutional law of this land that the rulings of the presiding officers in our State Legislatures upon questions of order are to be supervised by the brigadier-generals by brevet of the Army of the United States, and they to back their appellate decision by the bayonets of the Army? I confess, Mr. President, it fills me with amazement to hear such doctrines advocated here, or such positions stated, or any palliations for so plain and flagrant a violation of the constitution and of the rights of the Assembly of a free State, or what ought to be a free State.

But, sir, to proceed, for it is getting late and I want to be done, although there is a great deal more that I would like to say on this subject. But I cannot conclude without some remarks upon the message of the President of the United States and the telegrams of General Sheridan sent to us in answer to the resolution which I had the honor to offer to the Senate and which was adopted. Although that resolution has been answered, and therefore may have been supposed to pass from our consideration, yet as it is upon the subject under consideration it is proper to remark upon that message. On the 5th instant I offered a resolution in the Senate, in these words:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested to inform the Senate whether any portion of the Army of the United States, or any officer or officers, soldier or soldiers of such Army, did in any manner interfere or intermeddle with, control or seek to control, the organization of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana or either branch thereof on the 4th instant; and especially whether any person or persons claiming seats in either branch of said Legislature have been deprived thereof or prevented from taking the same by any such military force, officer, or soldier; and if such has been the case, then that the President inform the Senate by what authority such military intervention or interference took place.

A four days' debate upon this resolution followed, which was participated in by the leaders of the republican party on this floor—a debate remarkable in many respects, but most remarkable for the fact that no one denied the military intervention referred to in the resolution, and no one cited a word of the Constitution or a word of statute law that authorized or in any manner justified such intervention.

On the 13th, on the motion of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] an amendment, having no necessary connection with the resolution, was added to it, as follows:

And whether he has any information in regard to the existence of armed organizations in the State of Louisiana hostile to the government of the State and intent on overturning such government by force.

And, after being further amended, the resolution was passed in these words:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested to inform the Senate, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interests, whether any portion of the Army of the United States, or any officer or officers, soldier or soldiers, of such Army did in any manner interfere or intermeddle with, control or seek to control, the organization of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, or either branch thereof, on the 4th instant; and especially whether any person or persons claiming seats in either branch of said Legislature have been deprived thereof or prevented from taking the same by any such military force, officer, or soldier; and if such has been the case, then that the President inform the Senate under what circumstances and by what authority such military intervention and interference have taken place; and whether he has any information in regard to the existence of armed organizations in the State of Louisiana hostile to the government of the State and intent on overturning such government by force.

Before the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that my resolution contained but two inquiries, namely: First, did the military interfere as suggested; second, if yea, by what authority of law did it interfere? And I expressed my apprehension that if the amendment should be adopted, its only tendency would be to obscure these inquiries and divert attention from a flagrant and unparalleled violation of the Constitution. And I expressed the further apprehension that when the answer to the resolution, as amended, should come in, it would tell but half the story. Mr. President, the answer is in, and my apprehensions are fully verified. On the 13th instant the President sent in his message in reply to the resolution, and of that message I feel bound to say that nothing so full of error of statement and of law, nothing so remarkable for omissions of material facts, ever before emanated from the Executive of the Republic. Sir, it is my purpose to observe the courteous rules of the Senate in speaking of the Chief Magistrate—of him personally I shall not speak disrespectfully—but his message is open to every just criticism, and no rule of courtesy or of parliamentary law forbids my speaking of it in any just terms of condemnation, however severe.

And now, sir, let us briefly examine it. Our resolution asked the President, in the first place, to inform us whether any portion of the Army of the United States, or any officer or soldier thereof, did, in any manner, interfere or intermeddle with, control or seek to control, the organization of the General Assembly of Louisiana, or either branch thereof, on the 4th instant, and especially whether any person or persons claiming seats in either branch of said Legislature have been deprived thereof or prevented from taking the same by any such military force, officer, or soldier. Why did we ask this information of the President? Because he is the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, and is presumed to be informed of all its movements; and especially because it could not for a moment be supposed that any officer of the Army had used his command to organize a State Legislature, or to interfere in its organization, without instantly reporting his action, and the reasons for it, through the proper channels, to the President. We had the right, then, to suppose—nay, we were bound to suppose—that if any such military interference had taken place, an official report on the subject was on the files of the Department of War. The interference was on the 4th instant. It was nine days thereafter before the President sent in his message. The amplest time then had elapsed—nay, far more than ample time—for the officer or officers at Orleans to have drawn up and forwarded their official report to Washington. And now what have we? Nothing but a telegram from General Sheridan, written and sent on the fourth day of the Senate debate, (the 8th instant,) and after the whole country was aroused by the news, and indignant protests were being uttered everywhere against the military violence and usurpation that had taken place. No report from General De Trobriand, the officer who actually and in person interfered and turned members out of their seats and out of the hall; no report from General Emory, who was his superior officer at the time of the interference; not a line of statement from either one of these officers. But in lieu of the reports we should have had from them, we have a one-sided telegram from General Sheridan, written four days afterward, from which facts of the most material character are omitted, and in which positions of law are taken that are utterly indefensible.

Sir, have the rights of the States become of so little consequence, has the supremacy of the civil over the military power become so absolute, that a soldier of the Federal Government can invade a State Legislature and eject persons claiming seats therein, and make no report of his proceedings and of the reasons that induced them? Have our generals stationed in the States become irresponsible satraps, ruling over prostrate provinces according to their own supreme will and pleasure? Where, I repeat, is the report of De Trobriand? What account does he give of his acts on that memorable day? What defense does he make for a deed that the President himself is forced to admit was without legal justification? What order of his superior, General Emory, does he produce in his defense; and, if any, what excuse has Emory to allege for issuing the order? And, order or no order, what step has the President taken to bring these offenders against the Constitution and the laws to an account for their misconduct? Upon all these points the message is as silent as the grave. Except inferentially, and by a reference to Sheridan's telegram, it does not even admit that there was military interference at all. But thus admitting it, while it declines to justify, it seeks to palliate and excuse it. We are told that "the Army is not composed of lawyers," and that "there are circumstances connected with the late legislative imbroglio in Louisiana which seem to exempt the military from any intentional wrong in that matter."

Ah, Mr. President, are we yet to learn that it is no defense for the humblest and most ignorant man in the land, accused of crime, that he was ignorant of the law, and that his intentions in violating it were not willfully wrong, nay, were praiseworthy? In no civilized country, in no country where law prevails, is that defense allowed. But when one of the greatest of crimes against free institutions has been committed in this Republic—when, in plain violation of our fundamental law and of the underlying principle of all free government, the military has set itself above the civil power, then the brigadier-general who acted, the major-general who ordered, and the Lieutenant-General who approves, are exempted from censure by the Commander-in-Chief, the President, on the plea that they are not lawyers, and that no intentional wrong was designed. It is of no consequence that the military assumed to decide who were members of a State Legislature; it is of no consequence that they expelled members duly elected, and that in consequence of that expulsion the seats of those members are now held by defeated candidates; it is of no consequence that by these high-handed proceedings the will of the people of Louisiana has been overthrown and a government not of their choice imposed on them by force—all these things are of no consequence, it would seem, in the eyes of the President; for none of these things has he a word of censure or rebuke; for is it not true, he exclaims, that Army people are not lawyers, and whatever may have been their offenses they were guiltless of intentional wrong?

Senators, if you wish free institutions to be preserved, it is time to teach the Army, from the highest to the lowest man in it, that there is such a thing as law, and that the absence of intentional wrong does not justify its violation. It is time to teach it that in every free country the military is subordinate to the civil power. It is time to teach it that in this Republic the States as well as the Federal Government have rights that are sacred and must be respected.

But to proceed with the message. It is clearly established that a majority of the members of the house of representatives of Louisiana participated in the proceedings that resulted in the election of Wiltz as speaker. The house, if all the seats had been filled, would have consisted of one hundred and eleven members. Fifty-six would therefore have been a majority and a quorum. Now, what took place? I have already shown that by what I have had read at the desk, and by which it appears that more than a quorum participated in what was done.

Now, sir, why were these important facts omitted from General Sheridan's telegram: 1. That after Wiltz's appointment as temporary speaker the republican members remained in the hall, and that republicans as well as conservatives moved for a permanent organization. 2. That, the motion for such organization being carried, republicans as well as conservatives participated in the election which resulted in the choice of Wiltz as permanent speaker—55 votes being cast for Wiltz, 2 for Hahn, (republican,) and 1 blank; making 58 in all. 3. That Wiltz thereupon proceeded to swear in the members, and that among those sworn in by him were Baker, Drury, Hahn, Murrell, and Thomas, (republicans.) 4. That a committee on privileges and elections was appointed, of which Hahn and, I believe, another republican were members; and that committee made its report brought in by all, and that Hahn asked leave to make a minority report. That the five ejected members were, according to the election returns, duly elected, that their seats were not contested, and that the returning board had not decided against them. Why were these material, nay conclusive, facts suppressed in Sheridan's telegram? I leave his defenders to answer, and it is to be hoped that they may find some better defense than the plea that he is not a lawyer and meant no intentional wrong. Lawyer or no lawyer, it was his duty to tell the whole truth. That he could tell without being a lawyer. He knew that Congress and the country wanted to know the truth and the whole truth. He knew when he wrote that telegram that the Senate was in the fourth day of an excited debate on the subject. He knew that the resolution before the Senate would pass, and the President be called upon for information. He knew that the telegram he was writing would be a portion of the information that the President would communicate to the Senate. All this he must have known unless his ignorance is too profound for description. Why then, I repeat, did he give but a part of the facts? And why, above all things, was it that the facts he omitted to give were precisely the most material facts that he should have stated? And why are these facts left out of the President's message? He was called upon to state the circumstances under which the military interference took place. The right of the five expelled members to their seats was one of the circumstances, and the most important of all. He so considered it, for the message treats them as intruders. But why are not the facts stated that show that they were not intruders?

But I have not done, sir, with the statements and omissions of Sheridan's telegram. Listen to the following extract from it:

Acting on the protest made by the majority of the house—

That is not correct, unless 52 made a majority of 111—

the governor now requested the commanding general of the department to aid him in restoring order, and enable the legally returned members of the house to proceed with its organization according to law. This request was reasonable and in accordance with law.

I should like to see the law that made it reasonable to request the commanding general of the department of Louisiana to interfere in the organization of the house of Assembly of that State. But General Sheridan thinks it was "reasonable and in accordance with law." I do not know what law it is to which he refers unless it is that law by which he thinks he would have the right to hang men by military commission, if the President would only graciously declare them to be banditti. According to that law this may have been very reasonable, but according to no other law that is known among civilized men. But I have not come to the most remarkable thing yet:

Remembering vividly the terrible massacre that took place in the city on the assembling of the constitutional convention in 1866, at the Mechanics' Institute, and believing that the lives of the members of the Legislature were or would be endangered in case an organization under the law was attempted, the posse was furnished, with the request that care should be taken that no memer of the Legislature returned by the returning board should be ejected from the floor.

That was the only care. Eject all who are not returned by the returning board, however clear their right to seats may be, and although their right has been declared by the solemn vote of the house itself. If they have not been returned by the fraudulent returning board, eject them; but take care not to eject any that are returned by that board!

This military posse performed its duty under directions from the governor of the State.

I should like to know where the authority is to put the troops of the United States under the control of the governor of a State for him, in violation of the constitution of his State, to interfere with the organization of the State Legislature. That is a piece of law I should like General Sheridan to point out, as he speaks about law. The President pleads ignorance of law for the Army. The General states that the proceedings were according to law, but he does not vouch his law. I should like him to show where was the law that authorized the Army to be put under the command of the governor of a State, and, above all things, under his command for the purpose of interfering with the organization of one of the houses of the Legislature.

This military posse performed its duty, under directions from the governor of the State, and removed from the floor of the house those persons who had been illegally seated, and who had no legal right to be there, whereupon the democrats rose and left the house, and the remaining members proceeded to effect an organization under the State laws. In all this turmoil, in which bloodshed was imminent, the military posse behaved with great discretion. When Mr. Wiltz, the usurping speaker of the house, called for troops to prevent bloodshed, they were given him. When the governor of the State called for a posse for the same purpose, and to enforce the law, it was furnished also. Had this not been done, it is my firm belief that scenes of bloodshed would have ensued.

Sir, it is marvelous that a man holding the commission of Lieutenant-General of the Army could pen such a dispatch as that. Who was it that threatened bloodshed there? He refers to the massacre in 1866 at the Mechanics' Institute, and he says there would have been danger of bloodshed if there had been an attempt to organize the Legislature according to law. How could there have been bloodshed there? That whole State-house was surrounded by the metropolitan police, which is an armed band of men, brigaded, regular troops, under the command of Kellogg; and in addition to them the troops of the United States surrounded the building completely and prevented any ingress to or egress from it, except of such persons as Governor Kellogg saw fit to admit or to allow to go out. I saw in the hands of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. STEVENSON] the other day a photograph taken by some artist of the State-house as it appeared at that time, a perfect cordon of troops and of bayonets around it. And who were inside to produce bloodshed? There were fifty-five conservative members, a sergeant-at-arms, a clerk, and ten assistant sergeants-at-arms—sixty-seven men in all; while in the lobby of that house were hundreds of Kellogg's troops, the metropolitan police, and they were afterward re-enforced by fifty or sixty of the very worst ruffians of the radical party in the city of New Orleans. Who was it made the disturbance when General De Trobriand was requested by Wiltz to speak to those disorderly persons in the lobby, and which is magnified here into a request that he should intervene with his bayonets, when no such request was ever made; when the request was simply that he should speak to these people? Who were those disorderly persons who were threatening to shed blood? They were certainly not conservatives, for the interest of every conservative there was that there should be peace and order. They were not conservatives, for there were but sixty-seven conservative men in that hall, and there were three or four or five times that number of radicals. They were not conservatives, for the State-house was surrounded by the troops of the governor and the troops of the United States.

Mr. SARGENT. Allow me to ask the Senator a question?

Mr. THURMAN. I would rather not. It is getting late and I want to get through. I said when I got up that I did not desire to be interrupted. The Senator will have ample time to answer me.

Then, sir, it is impossible that the ruffians who threatened to shed blood could have been conservatives. They were not. No white-leaguers were admitted into that house, unless you call the members and their twelve officers white-leaguers; nobody was admitted there except such as Kellogg saw fit to admit; and for the Lieutenant-General of the Army to pretend that it was necessary to march out these five men between bayonets in order to prevent the shedding of blood in that hall is one of the most remarkable statements that I ever have known in all my life. Sir, instead of the mob being marched out, the members were marched out; instead of the disorderly being expelled, the peaceable members were expelled; instead of those who were expelled being a mob, it was the men who clamored for their expulsion who were the mob; instead of the military interference occurring to suppress a riot, it occurred that the rioters might triumph.

But there is another thing, and why does Sheridan ignore that? Why does he ignore the fact that the conservative leaders in all their addresses to the people and in circulars issued by them during that whole day counseled perfect peace and quiet? Why is all that omitted? Why is the attempt made to induce the American people to believe that the intervention of the military was for the purpose of preventing bloodshed? No, sir; it will not do. That house had been quietly engaged in its work for more than an hour when that military interference took place. It took place not for the purpose of restoring order, not for the purpose of preserving order, but for the purpose of usurping the government of Lousiana, just as was done two years before.

But, Mr. President, what do we hear now? When this matter is brought before the Senate of the United States, when acts have been done that are utterly destructive of free institutions, when the very ax is laid to the root of everything like constitutional government, what is the defense—no, I will not say defense, but how is the attention of the people sought to be diverted from this enormity? What kind of sand is it that is thrown in their eyes? Why, sir, we have pictures of southern society presented in which it is represented as in a state of anarchy. General Sheridan telegraphs that there have been thirty-five hundred murders in the State of Louisiana within the last three years—I think that is his statement.

Mr. DAVIS. Since 1866.

Mr. THURMAN. Since 1866 there have been thirty-five hundred murders. How does he know it? He had been in New Orleans four days. How did he learn that there had been thirty-five hundred murders there? From rumor, or the statements of persons interested in libeling the people of Louisiana. Furthermore, it was said yesterday on this floor that not one single case of murder in Louisiana had been punished, if I understood the remarks of the Senator who spoke. Why, sir, I have in my desk a list of no less than thirteen pardons by Kellogg of persons convicted of homicide, and most of them of murder in the first degree, in the single year 1874. No convictions, forsooth!

It has been said again and again that white men are not arrested who commit murder; that nobody but black men are arrested. I have before me a statement of the committals to one of the largest prisons in that State of homicides; and let us see what is the color of the persons arrested and committed for that offense. This covers the time spoken of by Sheridan, and of the arrests for homicide fifty-eight were white and forty-four blacks. Does that look as if white men are allowed to go acquit? More white men were arrested, more white men charged with homicide there than blacks, and yet the number is so nearly equal that one is at a loss to know which class of the community is most to be condemned.

But why undertake to convey the idea that all the homicides in Louisiana or Arkansas or Mississippi are homicides for political purposes, when the fact is notorious that the majority of the homicides committed in those States are by blacks upon blacks, and it could not well be otherwise. You set free that vast population of colored men, the most of them being in profound ignorance. That was all right enough. I am glad they are free, and have always been glad to see them free. But when you have set them free and banded them together as you did in loyal leagues, and set their faces in opposition to the whites, and drawn the race line as plain as a sunbeam—when you did that through your Freedmen's Bureau and the expenditure of public money—when that was done and those negroes had arms in their hands, somebody was bound to be hurt. You could not put arms in the hands of those men in their semi-barbarous condition without their feeling a disposition to use them. It is in their instincts; it is in their nature; and although they do improve, as I have every reason to believe they do, in civilization, year by year, yet it was inevitable that if you put into the hands of seven or eight hundred thousand semi-barbarians instruments of destruction they would use them; and they destroy each other far more than the whites destroy them. Yet every murder that takes place is exaggerated—for it is swelled to ten before you get through with it—and is said to be a murder for political purposes. Ah, Mr. President, the waning fortunes of no political party can be sustained by any such clamor as this. No, sir; the people of the United States are too wise, are too just, and know too well how to sift testimony, to be imposed upon by any such statements.

The Senator who addressed you yesterday alluded to the State of Alabama. I have here a letter, and as it is not very long I will ask that it may be read, from a member of the House from Alabama who is on the committee of the House that went to that State to investigate its condition.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1875.

SIR: I was much surprised to hear Senator SHERMAN lending the weight of his character to the slander on the people of Louisiana, uttered by General Sheridan, as to the number of murders that had taken place in that State. While it is not stated by these gentlemen that these thousand murders were political assassinations, the charge has no significance, unless they design it to be so understood. I venture the opinion that it will be found to be an atrocious misrepresentation, with the smallest amount of truth to support it. I come to this conclusion from the testimony adduced before the Alabama committee appointed by the House of Representatives to investigate the condition of affairs in that State during the late political campaign. You will recollect the letter of Hon. CHARLES HAYS to Hon. JOSEPH R. HAWLEY, specifying numerous outrages that had taken place from about the 1st of July to the 15th of September, 1874, and also telegraphic dispatches to the same effect published in the northern papers. The number of murders thus stated as having occurred in the counties of Choctaw, Marengo, Sumter, Pickens, Green, and Coffee, (all of which are included in Mr. HAYS' congressional district except the last,) and which occurred within the space of two months and a half, amounts to thirty-six, to say nothing of twenty or thirty wounded. With the exception of the murder of Billings and Ivey, in Sumter County—the former a white and the latter a colored man—there was not a particle of evidence before the committee that any such killings had taken place in either of these counties, and they were proved to be unfounded as far as a negative can be.

I was of the sub-committee that examined witnesses in Sumter County for four days—near the center of these alleged outrages—and with the exceptions I have mentioned no witness stated that any such homicides, or any homicides at all, had occurred in these counties, as stated in the Hawley letter or the telegraphic dispatch referred to. The evidence, now in course of publication, will confirm my statement in every jot and tittle.

But if by murders is to be understood all homicides of every description, including the killing of negroes by negroes, and the justifiable killing of negroes and white men in the perpetration of a felony, such as robbery, arson, burglary, rape, &c., then there may be some semblance of truth in this statement of General Sheridan, indorsed by Senator SHERMAN. I was informed by a gentleman in Montgomery County, Alabama, that at the time we were there the jail of the county contained upward of one hundred prisoners awaiting trial, principally for felony; that all were negroes except one or two, and that there were not less than a dozen murders in that county during the year 1874, and all of them committed by negroes, upon negroes. This county has a large republican majority and has been entirely under the control of the negroes since reconstruction. I apprehend that a thorough investigation as to these thousand murders in Louisiana will show that at least four-fifths of all that have been committed have no political significance whatever, which General Sheridan knows, if Senator SHERMAN does not.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

A. H. BUCKNER.

Hon. A. G. THURMAN.

Mr. THURMAN. I shall occupy the attention of the Senate but a few moments longer. That there have been deeds of violence in the South no one has ever denied; that deeds of violence have been more common in some portions of the South in proportion to their population than in some parts of the North has been true for fifty years and more, though taking the whole country into view there has, I am told, been as little violence in the South as in the North. The habit of carrying arms has always been more common at the South than at the North; the use of these arms has always been more common there upon causes that at the North would not have been considered justifiable. That is all true; but to attempt to draw a parallel between the South and the North in that respect by the census tables of 1870, and find out that there is a larger percentage of homicides or shootings in the South than there is at the North, is only to repeat the same old story that we used to read in the abolition primers fifty years ago. But that there have been acts of violence there, I say again, nobody denies, and that they have been aggravated by the state of things there is quite possible; and there is nobody who thinks of them with a right mind but deplores them, and they have never been defended upon this floor. But that these reports are greatly exaggerated, I have not the slightest doubt, and I think that that can be proved. Here allow me to ask if the state of society there is such as it has been depicted, then, in God's name, what has been the success of republican rule in this country? You had complete power in the Federal and in most of the southern State governments for years after the war. There has not been a day since Louisiana was reconstructed, as you call it, that she has not been in the hands of the republican party; there has not been a day since the war that the republican party has not been omnipotent in the Federal Government; there has not been a day when Mississippi has not been in the hands of the republican party. Now I want to know what has been your success as rulers if this is the condition of society in these States.

Sir, if the speeches we have heard are true, if your rule has brought such utter ruin upon that country that it is all a Golgotha, that the blood rises from the very ground at every step you take, then I say that it is time for you to give up the rule and let others try their hand at governing that country. I would want no better condemnation of the republican party than this state of things if it were true. It would show conclusively that you have not been equal to the task that was imposed upon you. But, sir, is it true that there has been this state of things? Is it true that it has existed? Is it true that there have been thirty-five hundred murders in the State of Louisiana in the time that General Sheridan talks about? If that is the case I want to know why a remedy has not been applied. If there is an organized conspiracy there to deprive more than half the people of that State of their constitutional rights and to overturn the government of the State and organize a conspiracy against the Government of the United States—but to say nothing of that, confine it to the government of the State—why is it that the republican party in power in that State has applied no remedy?

Sir, you depict a state of things which requires in the opinion of General Sheridan the proclamation of martial law and the trial of men by military commission. That seems to be approved in some quarters. His proposition that the President shall issue a proclamation calling the people banditti or that we should pass a law declaring them to be such may not be directly sanctioned; but Senators seem to think that the state of society and the amount of crime which he asserts to exist would authorize the severest possible measures that he has recommended. Why have they not been adopted? Why has not the radical Legislature of Louisiana long ago declared martial law, I want to know, if the life of a republican is not safe in Louisiana? A State Legislature can declare martial law where there is an insurrection against the State. This was decided both by the supreme court of Rhode Island and by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Dorr case. The Legislature of Louisiana has had the power to declare martial law; and if murder has been so rampant there, if a man cannot with safety express his opinion if he is a republican, if organized murder and assassination are the instruments with which the majority of the people of that State are deprived of their constitutional rights, I want to know why it is that the radical Legislature of that State has not long ago declared martial law and put an end, if martial law could end them, to these horrible crimes. The fact that it has not done so, the fact that it has not taken one step toward such a thing is a plain refutation of these exaggerated stories. I do not deny that there have been homicides there; I do not deny that there has been violence there; I do not deny that it exists in a greater degree than it does in Massachusetts or Ohio. In the unsettled state of society there, with the yoke of a usurping government upon the people, with their property depressed to a fourth of its value and taxation increased until it amounts to confiscation, it is not very wonderful that there should be more crimes and violence than in a well-ordered and peaceable State. But that the State of Louisiana or the States of Arkansas or Mississippi are these perfect dens of iniquity, these perfect fields of gore and of carnage that are described in that telegram of Sheridan's is what I do not believe. I prefer to believe the business men of New Orleans of all parties and of all nativities; I prefer to believe the men trading there from the North; I prefer to believe her organized bodies, her chambers of commerce, her boards of trade, the presidents of her banks, and above all I prefer to believe her reverend clergy, to the rumors that have reached the ear of General Sheridan and which he reports here as official facts.

And when we come to the State of Arkansas, I prefer to believe the reports of her men of business and of her reverend clergy to the statements of Sheridan issued from New Orleans upon rumor and the reports of men interested to distort the truth. He describes Arkansas as nearly as bad or quite as bad as Louisiana. You have seen contradictions of that statement; but there is one of those contradictions to which I beg leave to refer, because it comes from a man whom I have known for many years, and who never was known by any man who did not love, respect, and esteem him. The card published by the clergy of Little Rock, at the head of which stands the name of the bishop of Little Rock, is worth a thousand telegrams of Sheridan on hearsay as to the condition of that State. I know that man, Bishop Fitzgerald. I have known him for many a long year. He formerly lived in my town, and I knew him well. A more upright, humble, truthful Christian man does not walk the face of the earth. There is no consideration that would make that man say what was false. When I see his name signed to that card, and when I know that he travels over the whole of that State more than any man in it, travels on horseback and on foot with the self-sacrificing spirit of a martyr, I know that what he says must be the truth and the unvarnished truth.

Mr. President, one word more and I have done. These outrages, if they exist, are very much to be deplored; but there is something more deplorable than even violence. When you sap the foundation of constitutional government, when you overthrow the free institutions of America, you do an evil, you perpetrate a wrong, fraught with a thousand times more mischief to your fellow-men now and in the future than even the prevalence of crime. You cannot accustom the people of this country to see the military place itself above the civil power; you cannot accustom the people of this country to see armed men intrude themselves into the halls of legislation and decide questions of membership there with the bayonet; you cannot see that done and pass it by even in silence, much less with approbation, much longer without finding that everything like respect for constitutional government and free institutions has vanished from the land. Ah, Mr. President, it is a terrible crime to assassinate a man, but it is worse crime to assassinate the constitution of a free people. These acts of military interference have driven a dagger to the heart of free institutions, and the question now to be settled is whether they can survive the blow.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana near me wishes to make some observations touching a point or two referred to by the Senator from Ohio, and I gladly yield to him with the understanding that I may resume the floor at one o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, at the commencement of the remarks of the Senator from Ohio he took occasion to request that no interruption should be made during the course of his speech, and he said that at the conclusion he would very cheerfully respond to interrogatories that might be propounded. I would ask his attention now for a moment, having complied with his request not to be interrupted, although inadvertently I did make one remark in the course of his speech, and he immediately replied to that. He said that in the parish of De Soto certain democrats were returned elected, and he quoted from the report of the committee of the other House to show that such was the fact; and he also took occasion to say that by the law of Louisiana triplicate returns were made out and forwarded, one to the secretary of state, one to the returning board, and one was kept by the commissioner of elections.

Mr. THURMAN. No; one kept by the clerk of the district court.

Mr. WEST. Well, one kept by the clerk of the district court, transmitted from the commissioners of election. I rise to ask him where he finds that law, and whether he relies on the law of 1872 for his statement of facts?

Mr. THURMAN. I think I can find it for the Senator very quickly.

Mr. WEST. I will say to the Senator that if it is otherwise than in the law of 1872, I have not had an opportunity of seeing the other laws for a reason that he very well knows.

While the Senator is looking for the provision, I will read from the law of 1872, and I will show the Senator and the Senate why those returns never came into the possession of the returning board, and why it would have been a felony—and it was a felony—to put them in the hands of the secretary of state. Section 43 of the act of 1872 provides that the commissioners of election shall make duplicate returns, one of which set of returns shall be sent to the supervisor of registration, and he shall send a compilation of these returns to the returning board, and the other returns are to be filed by the commissioners of election, with the clerk of the district court.

Now, I will just give a piece of history in connection with that parish and one other parish, and that is all I will trespass upon the attention of the Senate with at the present time. The intimidation practiced in the parish of De Soto was so outrageous and so violent that the supervisor of registration took the responsibility of not making a return. He is amenable to the laws of the State if he did not. It is alleged in this report, and there is nothing to substantiate it—a mere allegation—that those returns were put in the hands of a woman of bad character, and that—

> The conservative committee took legal proceedings to compel their production; but the court held that it had no jurisdiction to that end. They then caused to be produced before the board the duplicate of those returns.

How did they get those duplicates? How came they to have them there ready to be produced? Where was the law for it? What does the law say?

> SEC. 45. Be it further enacted, &c., That any civil officer or other person who shall assume or pretend to act in any capacity as a commissioner or other officer of election to receive or count votes, to receive returns or ballot-boxes, or to do any other act toward the holding or conducting elections, or the making returns thereof, in violation of or contrary to the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a felony.

It was a felony to have had them there, as far as I have seen the law. How could the returning board have taken any cognizance of those returns in view of that provision?

That is the fact in regard to that parish. There are also some other facts which I will not allude to at the present time, but I shall on a subsequent occasion, as to the registration and the conduct of the people in that parish.

Then the Senator passed to Winn Parish, and he contended that members were returned by that parish, and consequently were entitled to their seats. The report on which he relies says:

> In Winn Parish, where 404 conservative and 164 republican votes were cast upon a verbal protest that the registrar of elections was not properly qualified.

I understand the facts are these with respect to that: A registrar who pretended to conduct that election up there was not the appointee of the governor, and was not qualified and could not take the oath without laying himself liable to this penalty; the original registrar who was sent up there was run off by the Ku-Klux and the White League, and had no opportunity of conducting the registration, and the parish improvised a supervisor of registration. Of course the returning board could take no jurisdiction or cognizance of any return made by an officer not qualified or appointed according to law.

I rose to ask of the Senator his information. I have given my information on the point of the law in Louisiana. If he has information, I should be glad to know it, because we all want to know whether he has it.

Mr. THURMAN. In respect to the law requiring these duplicates, it is perfectly immaterial whether the duplicates were to be made by the supervisor of registration, or whether they were to be made by the commissioners of election. In either event they were duplicates of the official returns of the election, and in fact they were entitled to more credit if they were made according to the section which the Senator read, by the commissioners of elections, than if they were made by a mere compiler, the supervisor of registration.

But when the Senator says that a man would be guilty of a felony in any civilized community in the world because he produced before a returning board of the votes of electors the very best evidence which the nature of the case admitted of the result of an election, to wit, the duplicate official returns, and which the law must have contemplated should be used for that very purpose to supply a loss of the original—when he says that that would send a man to the penitentiary in Louisiana, then he makes out a case in which the law is worse than the Ku-Klux.

Now, with regard to De Soto Parish, the Senator says there was such intimidation there! If there was intimidation enough there to make it dangerous for the commissioners of election to enter the protest that the law required, or to make it dangerous for the supervisor of registration, although he really has no authority to record any such thing, I should think there would be a great deal more danger for a supervisor of registration who would run away with the returns to New Orleans and deposit them with such a depositary as this man did; and yet I do not find that this supervisor of registration has been assassinated; I do not find that he has been ku-kluxed in any way.

It is very much like a thing I saw of Ex-Governor Wells—I think that is his name—the man who swore out the vote of the whole parish of Rapides by an ex post facto affidavit, when he admits that no protest or certificate came up such as the law required; but he says, just as the Senator now says, why there was such intimidation there that if any man had made a certificate that there was any intimidation he would have been killed outright; and therefore there is no certificate, and therefore the returning board, in plain violation of the statute law, should be authorized upon his affidavit (which nobody ever saw but that returning board) to throw out that whole parish! And yet Ex-Governor Wells is living in the parish of Rapides. He says no man could have put in a simple protest stating the fact that there was intimidation in that parish, without losing his life; and yet this man himself, who has deprived the whole parish of representation in the Legislature upon an ex parte, ex post facto affidavit, is allowed to live and to move and to have his being as much as the most peaceable and law-abiding man in the country! Why, sir, I undertake to say if such excuses as these for throwing aside elections and overturning them are to be respected in the Senate of the United States or anywhere in this country, elections are a mockery and a farce; and the faction having a majority either in a State Legislature or in Congress may do whatever it pleases, however violative of right, justice, the Constitution, even decency, and it will be supported by faction!

Mr. WEST. I asked the Senator a question in reference to one parish and he replies by making a statement in regard to another. Now, I stated the fact that according to the law of Louisiana there were no returns from the parish of De Soto, and the Senator cannot contradict it. I asked him for his authority about the duplicate returns. He fails to produce it, but he says there were other returns there and they ought to have been acknowledged. Why, sir, what becomes of his whole argument against the Kellogg election? The whole Kellogg election was based upon the fact of using these very duplicate returns, and the Senator wants them used in this case and would not allow us to use them then.

Mr. THURMAN. When we have here the sworn testimony of that Lynch board that they made up those returns from newspapers and from rumors, and that when they could find neither one nor the other they made them up from their own knowledge of the political complexion of a parish, and that they would put down the returns according as they thought the vote ought to have been, not what it was, but estimated it according to what they thought it ought to have been, and furthermore than that, when they themselves admitted that they counted the affidavits, which were shown to be forged by the thousand, as so many votes, I am amazed that the Senator should say that Kellogg was counted in upon any such duplicate returns as these. If they were duplicates, they showed McEnery elected; but they were no such thing.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and fifty-eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 27, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DURHAM. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. SENER. I hope the gentleman will waive that call for a moment.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] calls for the regular order.

FEES OF CLERKS, MARSHALS, ETC.

Mr. SENER. The gentleman yields to me to ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 3623, to amend the twenty-third paragraph of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SENER. I ask that the committee have leave to report this back at any time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object to that.

Mr. SENER. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill and amendments were referred; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPEER. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of House bill No. 3208, for the relief of John Henderson, and that it be passed at this time. It is reported unanimously from the Committee on Claims, and makes an appropriation of only forty-eight dollars.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object to the consideration and passage of any bill at this time. I will not object to references of bills.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary, authorized to make that report at any time. And I should like the attention of the House for a few minutes before I proceed.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman wants to speak, he must make his report first, in order to have something to speak upon.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I report the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have it put upon its passage now.

Mr. RANDALL. At the proper time I will raise the question of consideration.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Has the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] the right to report that bill at any time? I understand that the only right he has upon the subject is upon a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that at the last session the distinct privilege was given to the Committee on the Judiciary to report at any time on this subject.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If in order, I would like to have the record read on that subject.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is in print, and the gentleman can look at the Journal and read it for himself.

Mr. RANDALL. Go to the record; that is the most reliable witness.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am aware there has been a sort of understanding about the House, that there was an agreement that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] might report this bill at any time. I do not, however, understand that that is the order that was made.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider, which the gentleman admits was made, amounts to the same thing.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I suppose not; the gentleman cannot supersede the regular order by that motion.

The SPEAKER. O, yes.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It cannot be called up at any time.

The SPEAKER. Yes; it is highly privileged.

Mr. RANDALL. I appeal to the record.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am highly confident that there is no record giving the right to report at any time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to state for the information of the House that the bill——

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I only wish to state the number of the bill. It is number 796, printer's number 4100.

Mr. RANDALL. I am obliged to the gentleman for the information.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not think it is any better on account of the high number it is carrying.

The SPEAKER. On the 7th of January, 1874, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary reported a bill to protect all persons in their civil and political rights, which bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the motion to reconsider the recommitment is pending. The Clerk will read the rule upon that subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a motion has been once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, it shall be in order for any member of the majority to move for the reconsideration thereof, on the same or succeeding day; and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions, except a motion to adjourn; and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House, and thereafter any member may call it up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may have been in error on the point of the right to report at any time; but this motion to reconsider is precisely tantamount—is just as highly privileged.

Mr. RANDALL. I raise the question of consideration at this time.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I suppose that rule does not authorize the gentleman to call up the motion to reconsider against any other motion.

The SPEAKER. It does; the rule could not be stronger. It can come up against any motion, except the motion to adjourn. It is one of the highest privilege known. The motion derives its high privilege from this fact; whatever the House has done in any direction, if the House should desire to change its action, it ought to have the right to reconsider it. Therefore the motion to reconsider is given this high privilege.

Mr. ELDREDGE. But the rule does not justify that construction. The rule is not that such a motion may supersede other business or any other privileged motion. It may be called up, I suppose——

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes that the gentleman from Wisconsin did not listen to the rule as read by the Clerk. The Chair will read it himself:

When a motion has been once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, it shall be in order for any member of the majority to move for the reconsideration thereof, on the same or succeeding day; and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions, except a motion to adjourn——

Mr. ELDREDGE. That is, at the time—— and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House, and thereafter any member may call it up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. O, no—

Mr. ELDREDGE. "May call it up;" but not, as I suppose, to the exclusion of other business or of special orders.

The SPEAKER. Not only is that the forty-ninth rule of the House, but it has had fifty years of construction. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill (H. R. No. 796) was recommitted. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] raises the question of consideration. That is in order. The question is, will the House consider the motion for reconsideration?

Mr. RANDALL and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the superintendent of the Government hospital for the insane in relation to the erection of a new building to be devoted solely to the detention and treatment of female patients at the Insane Asylum; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PRAIRIE BAND OF POTTAWATOMIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draught of a bill providing for the investment of certain funds belonging to the Prairie band of Pottawatomie Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

KASKASKIA INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to an estimate of appropriation required for the confederated tribes of the Kaskaskias in the State of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS FOR INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of May 29, 1872, certain claims for Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

E. M. SEWELL & CO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, requesting the return of papers in relation to the claim of E. M. Sewell & Co. for depredations by Osage Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF MOUTH OF MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COST OF MODOC WAR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting the reports of the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General of Subsistence, giving in detail the cost to those Departments of the Modoc war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONTINGENT MILITARY EXPENSES.

SECOND LIEUTENANT FRANK BAKER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a memorial of Second Lieutenant Frank Baker, Thirteenth United States Infantry, asking to be relieved from accountability for certain subsistence funds which were stolen from him while on duty as acting commissary of subsistence at Fort Fred Steele, Wyoming Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FORT HARKER MILITARY RESERVATION, KANSAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the quantity of land included within the boundaries of the Fort Harker military reservation, Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FRANK A. PAGE, UNITED STATES ARMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the case of Frank A. Page, asking to be reinstated in the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

KICKAPOO INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting estimate of appropriation to pay certain members of the Kickapoo tribe of Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

THE CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is whether the House will now consider the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. Pending that motion, I move the House adjourn; and also that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a point of order, and it is that the rules provide in case of reconsideration of a vote only one motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. RANDALL. The rule refers to another matter entirely.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is superior to every other motion except a motion to adjourn; and the motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn is superior to the motion to adjourn, and must therefore take precedence.

Mr. RANDALL. On the latter motion, that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the motion that when the House adjourns it adjourn until Friday next, and which must first be voted on.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Suppose the House should wish to adjourn without fixing the day to which it shall adjourn over?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will enable the Chair to make that construction of the rule, dilatory motions would be at an end immediately.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not know how I can enable the Chair to make that construction of the rule. I move now to amend the motion, so that when we adjourn to-day it will be to meet on Saturday instead of Friday next.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order, that the House has not the power to adjourn over for more than three days.

The SPEAKER. To adjourn over until Saturday is not to adjourn for more than three days. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next instead of Friday.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 71.

Mr. ELDREDGE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ELDREDGE and Mr. RUSK were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 117, noes 18; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs the following rule to be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Every member who shall be in the House when the question is put shall give his vote, unless the House shall excuse him. All motions to excuse a member from voting shall be made before the House divides, or before the call of the yeas and nays is commenced; and the question shall then be taken without debate.

But on motions to adjourn, to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, and for a call of the House, it has been held not to be in order to ask to be excused from voting; and for the obvious reason that nothing but a desire to consume time, and thereby delay legislation, or to prevent a majority from adjourning, could possibly influence a member in making the request.

Mr. NIBLACK. I make the point of order that that only applies to votes by yeas and nays and not to votes by tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's point of order does not apply at all.

Mr. NIBLACK. I think the reading of the rule shows that it does apply. The first part of the rule read demonstrates its application only to votes by yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's point may be good in this, that then the refusal to vote becomes matter of record; but at the same time the Chair, under the rules, is compelled to recognize at once the failure of a quorum to vote whether upon the yeas and nays or by a division of the House through the tellers, and the rule as read specifically recognizes both. There is a duty laid upon him by the rules not to allow business to proceed if in his judgment there is not a quorum present.

Mr. NIBLACK. The point I make is that the only way in which you can know whether a member votes or not is by the record upon the call of the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The rules do not so contemplate; that is the only way failure to vote can be recorded, but the rules do not contemplate the point the gentleman suggests.

Mr. NIBLACK. When there is a division of the House by tellers or otherwise a member can vote for or against a proposal, and although he may vote in the minority will nevertheless have the right to move a reconsideration, whereas if the vote be by yeas and nays he must vote with the majority or else he cannot move a reconsideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's point is not good, because one of the most important votes in the House is that of seconding the demand for the previous question, where the yeas and nays are not permitted by the rules, and yet if members could take refuge under the gentleman's construction of the rules they could break up a quorum and stop all legislation.

Mr. COX. How can you compel members to vote?

The SPEAKER. That is not for the Chair to say.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The House is dividing, and this discussion is all out of order.

The SPEAKER. It is not out of order, because the rule read is pertinent to the division now proceeding.

Mr. RANDALL. What practical plan does the Chair propose to enforce that rule?

The SPEAKER. None whatever. The Chair only proposes that it shall be made manifest what the rules of the House do require, and that members are required to vote, which some of them are not now doing.

Mr. RANDALL. Then the responsibility rests with those who do not vote.

The SPEAKER. The responsibility of having the rule read rests with the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object at all to the Chair having the rule read.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If the Chair decides there is no power in the House to compel members to vote, while there is a constitutional provision to compel their attendance, what is the advantage of their attendance if we cannot compel them to vote? What is the use of compelling their attendance if the whole democratic party is to sit, as it is now doing, like logs, refusing to vote?

Mr. COX. What is the advantage of coming here at all? The gentleman from Massachusetts was himself left at home.

The SPEAKER. The tellers report that 117 have voted in the affirmative and 18 in the negative. No quorum has voted.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that a motion for a call of the House is not in order, because a motion to adjourn is pending. The gentleman from Wisconsin will observe that if pending a motion to adjourn there should be a motion to fix a day to which the House should adjourn, and no quorum should vote on that, and then a motion for the call of the House should be in order, the House could never adjourn. The motion is therefore not in order.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The House might vote down my motion.

The SPEAKER. Yes; and they might not; and that would put the House in a position where it could not adjourn.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Provided the motion was voted down. The Chair has not decided the question, as I understand, on account of there being no quorum?

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I desire the yeas and nays on the motion to amend by making Saturday the day to which the House shall adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do so because I feel that I am acting in accordance with the republican majority of the House. They have given me their moral support on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is will the House amend the motion as to the day to which the House will adjourn by inserting Saturday instead of Friday.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 72, nays 166, not voting 50; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. So the motion to amend by fixing Saturday as the day to which the House should adjourn was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. FARWELL said: I am paired with Mr. MITCHELL, of Wisconsin. If here, Mr. MITCHELL would vote "ay" and I would vote "no." My colleague, Mr. WARD, is necessarily absent. If here, he would vote "no."

Mr. PENDLETON. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I object.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The question recurred on the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday, on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 68, nays 150, not voting 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. Williams, and Woodworth—70.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. RANDALL that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The question was put on ordering the yeas and nays; and on a division there were—ayes 36, noes 94, one-fifth voting therefor.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported 58 in the affirmative.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is a sufficient number to order the yeas and nays, and I do not ask for a further count.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a count of the other side. You invited us here, and now let us complete the count.

The SPEAKER. The number reported by the tellers is one-fifth of the entire House, and the yeas and nays are therefore ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 74, nays 160, not voting 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Arthur, Barnum, Roderick R. Butler, Freeman Clarke, Creamer, Crooke, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, DeWitt, Eden, Eldredge, Farwell, Frye, Harrison, Hendee, Herndon, Hersey, George F. Ward, Wheeler, and Whitehouse—54.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next, and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KELLOGG. Have we not already voted down that motion once?

Mr. CESSNA. I raise the point of order that the motion made by my colleague has already been voted on and voted down by the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I await the decision of the Speaker.

Mr. KELLOGG. No leading vote has been taken since.

Mr. ELDREDGE. A motion to adjourn has since been voted on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is correct; a motion to adjourn has since been voted on.

Mr. RANDALL. I await the decision of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Under the usages of the House the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in order.

Mr. CESSNA. I only made the point of order that the gentleman might see what a pity it would be to change that rule.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say that we are ready to go on with the appropriation bills.

Mr. ELDREDGE. We have no disposition to antagonize anything else but this bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We do not go to the other side of the House to determine what business we shall take up.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. CESSNA. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I was not trying to debate; I was only trying to get in a remark.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we had better do this thing with good nature.

Mr. MAYNARD. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MAYNARD and Mr. ELDREDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported 51 in the affirmative.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is very manifest that there are enough to order the yeas and nays and I do not ask for a further count.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] by striking out Friday and inserting Saturday, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. BECK were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 50, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 71, nays 151, not voting 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell John B. So the motion of Mr. ELDREDGE was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. KELLOGG said: On this question I am paired with the gentleman from California, Mr. LUTTRELL; if here he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. LUTTRELL. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. KELLOGG.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the gentleman will vote, I will.

Mr. SPEER. I move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending of higher privilege, to fix the day to which the House will adjourn. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL, has moved that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next; and on that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CESSNA. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair. Suppose this motion should be carried, will it be in order again during the session of to-day to fix any other or different time for the next meeting of the House?

Mr. RANDALL. There is nothing in that.

Mr. CESSNA. Even should the session of to-day continue through until Friday at twelve o'clock; if the House shall agree that when it adjourns to-day it will meet on Friday next, will a motion to fix any other or different time for the meeting of the House be in order during to-day's session?

Mr. ELDREDGE. You will find your answer in Barclay's Digest.

Mr. CESSNA. I did not ask the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDREDGE.] I can read the Digest and understand it as well as he can.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I did not think that anybody that could do that would ask such a question.

Mr. CESSNA. I presume it would answer the gentleman's purpose to have the whole of Barclay's Digest read. It would consume the day as profitably as what they have been doing.

Several MEMBERS. More so.

The SPEAKER. If the House should vote that when it adjourns to-day it would meet on Friday next and a motion to reconsider that vote be laid upon the table, that would not prevent the motion to adjourn until Saturday.

Mr. CESSNA. That answers the question.

The SPEAKER. So far as putting a stop to dilatory motions is concerned, it would avail nothing to agree to the pending motion.

Mr. CESSNA. I did not expect to do that.

Mr. SPEER. Then what did you expect by asking the question?

Mr. RANDALL. Let us keep in good humor, I beg.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly, if the House should agree to adjourn until Friday and should lay upon the table the motion to reconsider, it would not be parliamentary to revive that motion. But the time of meeting could be changed by the House subsequently by agreeing to adjourn until Saturday.

Mr. ELDREDGE. And if the House should agree to adjourn now, that would dispose of the civil-rights bill for to-day.

Mr. CESSNA. Suppose the House should agree to a motion that when it adjourns to-day it would be to meet on Saturday, that being the utmost limit fixed by the Constitution for one House to adjourn without the concurrence of the other, could any motion be made during to-day's session to change that hour of meeting?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it could. If the House should agree that when it adjourns to-day it will be to meet on Saturday, and subsequently some business of great importance should be developed requiring a session on Friday, the House could agree to meet on Friday.

Mr. CESSNA. The House having voted to adjourn to meet on Saturday, would not a motion to meet on Friday be inconsistent with that action?

The SPEAKER. The fact that it might be inconsistent would be a matter for members to determine; but parliamentarily the motion is admissible.

Mr. CESSNA. I do not think my friends on the other side would be inconsistent.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 75, nays 150, not voting 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. So the motion of Mr. RANDALL, that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday next, was not agreed to.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is that motion in order? We just decided that.

Mr. McCRARY. I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent——

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. ELDREDGE. My motion is a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CESSNA in the chair.) The motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] is a privileged motion, and is in order.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCRARY] asks unanimous consent——

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. McCRARY. Do you object to having my proposition read?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] moves that the House adjourn, and on that motion calls for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. ELDREDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 48, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. SPEER. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I raise the point that the House has just voted down that proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not in order until some other motion has intervened.

Mr. RANDALL. This motion is of higher privilege than the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But it has just been voted upon and decided in the negative. It cannot be entertained again until some other motion has been interposed.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion has also been rejected by a vote of the House.

Mr. ELDREDGE. But there has been a vote taken since that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair ruling out my last motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain the appeal.

Mr. ELDREDGE. When the Speaker of the House was in the chair a few moment ago he decided that such a motion was in order.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. ELDREDGE. I insist on my appeal.

Mr. BECK. I deny the right of the Chair to refuse to entertain the appeal.

The SPEAKER, (Mr. BLAINE having resumed the chair.) No appeal is in order. The proposed appeal is obviously out of order.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to ask a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. MILLS. May I not ask a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear a parliamentary inquiry from the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

Mr. MILLS. At what time may I ask to be excused from voting on the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. At no time. The gentleman has no right to ask it.

Mr. MILLS. The Chair said a while ago members could be excused.

The SPEAKER. What on? Not on any question now before the House. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when this House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday.

The SPEAKER. That has been decided adversely since the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ELDREDGE. But the motion to adjourn till Friday has been taken since.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen want to make dilatory motions and there is no necessity for raising points of order, as they can make dilatory motions ad infinitum.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The Chair does not object to our raising them when they are raised civilly?

The SPEAKER. Not at all; but where they have been ruled on there is no use of raising them again. The motion now pending is that the House adjourn. If the House negatives that, then the other motion is in order; and if the House negatives that, then a motion to adjourn is in order.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 70, nays 162, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Finck, Garfield, Glover, Gunter, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barnum, Cain, Freeman Clarke, Clinton L. Cobb, Cox, Creamer, Crooke, Curtis, Danford, DeWitt, Eden, Farwell, Frye, Giddings, Eugene Hale, Hancock, Hendee, Hersey, George F. Ward, Wheeler, Whitehouse, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—56.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the vote,

Mr. SOUTHARD stated that he was paired with his colleague, Mr. SHERWOOD, who would if present vote in the negative, while he would vote in the affirmative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that when the house adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. BUTLER. I raise the point of order that that has been voted down twice.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CESSNA in the chair.) On that the gentleman from Massachusetts raises the point of order that it has been already voted on. It was decided adversely, and other business having intervened, the Chair is compelled to rule the point of order not to be well taken.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentlemen on the other side listen to a proposition?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, if the same time be allowed us to answer.

Mr. ELDREDGE. We will give unanimous consent if we are allowed to reply in the same length of time to his proposition.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to granting this request with the understanding that the same time shall be allowed to the other side?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We have now wasted four hours of the public time upon the question of the consideration of the civil-rights bill. I desire to say to the opposite side of the House, if the bill is allowed to be considered, we on this side of the House will permit all proper opportunity for debate to be determined by the majority of the House, (after fair time for debate,) and in addition to that we will permit all proper time for amendments—for all germane amendments to be offered. So that the simple question is one of consideration of a public measure, leaving every member to move his amendments and make such speeches as the House will listen to—to consider the bill fairly and properly.

Mr. McCRARY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment to ask him to accept a resolution which I have prepared as a part of this statement?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts Certainly.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman from Massachusetts has concluded his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He still holds the floor and yields to the request of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. McCRARY. As a part of the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I ask that my resolution be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow the gentleman from Iowa to present his resolution as a part of his statement?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will as a part of my statement.

Mr. SPEER. That is not part of the agreement.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I adopt it as part of my statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not allow any advantage to be taken by one side over the other.

Mr. RANDALL. Unanimous consent only was given to the gentleman from Massachusetts to make a statement of his own and not anybody else's.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the proposition without receiving suggestions from any one. Is there objection to the resolution of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCRARY] being read?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I adopt it as part of my statement.

Mr. SPEER. I object to the resolution of the gentleman from Iowa being read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] proposes to make it a part of his statement without any regard whatever to the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

Resolved, That when the motion to reconsider the vote——

Mr. ELDREDGE. I raise the question of order that that is not in accordance with the arrangement which was made.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let me have the statement; I will read it myself.

Resolved, That when the motion——

Mr. ELDREDGE. I insist that this is a breach of the arrangement that was made.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This is simply my proposition put in form:

Resolved, That when the motion to reconsider the vote by which the civil-rights bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary shall again come before the House, there shall be allowed thereon, if demanded, at least two hours' time for debate, all but thirty minutes of which shall be given to the opponents of said bill; and when said bill shall come before the House for consideration, there shall be allowed, if demanded, four hours for debate, one-half of which shall be given to the opponents of said bill; and before the previous question is ordered not more than six amendments may be offered to said bill; and a separate vote shall be allowed upon each, but no dilatory motion (except one motion to adjourn) shall be allowed pending the consideration of said bill or pending said motion to reconsider and all amendments thereto.

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I desire to say that there is a special order assigned for to-day, which is the Post-Office appropriation bill. We propose, therefore, to make this proposition—I make it at least—that we shall proceed with that as the regular order by special assignment. I will therefore, if I am permitted, make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole, which I should have done had not the gentleman from Massachusetts, by his motion this morning, cut off the morning hour. The gentleman will understand that, having cut off the morning hour, he prevented me from making a motion to go into Committee of the Whole with the distinct understanding that we should take up the Post-Office appropriation bill, which is the special order for to-day. And in connection with that I will say that we desire to make the same motion as to every appropriation bill.

I make this proposition for myself: that we lay this question aside, take up and pass finally the appropriation bills necessary to carry on the Government from the 1st of July, 1875, to the 30th of June, 1876, and we struggle—for after all it is a question of physical endurance—after we have accomplished all the legislation necessary to carry on the Government for the next fiscal year, we shall struggle together as to this bill.

This is all I want to say except that we want, above all things, so far as I know, the judgment of this side of the House, to avoid an extra session of Congress on the 4th of March.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. My answer to that proposition is, first, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not upon the Committee on Appropriations which has control of the appropriation bills; secondly, that the majority of this House, being responsible for the legislation of the country, cannot permit the minority to dictate what legislation we shall present for consideration to the House and the country.

Mr. BUCKNER. It is a defeated majority.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I object to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.] They are not in accordance with what was agreed on by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then go ahead.

Several members demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER, (Mr. BLAINE having resumed the chair.) The pending motion is that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next.

Mr. RANDALL. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The House having divided on the question of ordering the yeas and nays, the Speaker declared that, in the judgment of the Chair, a sufficient number to order them had voted in the affirmative.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 44.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No further count is insisted on.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on further count. That is not one-fifth.

Mr. ELDREDGE and Mr. HAMILTON demanded further count.

The count proceeded; and the tellers reported ayes 50.

Mr. ELDREDGE. That is not one-fifth of the whole House.

The SPEAKER. It is one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not understand that to be the rule. I want to get these republicans to help us to filibuster, as they have been doing.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. BECK. I move to amend the pending motion by striking out "Friday" and inserting Saturday," so as to provide that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CESSNA. And I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BECK and Mr. CESSNA were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 49, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MILLS. Will it not be in order for the democrats to remain down in the area, as we have to come down so often?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know of any such designation as democrats in the House.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 67, nays 162, not voting 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Bowen, Bright, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. So the motion was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. STONE. I am paired upon this question with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. SHELDON. If here he would vote "no," and I should vote "ay."

Mr. SOUTHARD. I desire to state that on this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. SHERWOOD, who has gone from the city for some days. If present he would vote "no," while I would vote "ay."

Mr. PACKARD. Upon this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WOLFE. If present he would vote in the affirmative, and I should vote in the negative.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now adjourn, and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Is it in order now to move to fix the time to which the House shall adjourn?

Mr. WILBER. The 4th of March?

The SPEAKER. That will depend upon what time the gentleman would fix.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I would suggest next Friday.

The SPEAKER. That has just been voted down.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Well, if that is the sense of the House, I will then move to fix next Saturday as the time to which the House will adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I will make that motion after the yeas and nays shall have been ordered on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. It is the superior motion, and the gentleman can have the yeas and nays on that first, if he desires it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Then I will call for the yeas and nays on my motion.

Mr. CESSNA. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CESSNA and Mr. ELDREDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 59.

The SPEAKER. That is one-fifth of the entire House; the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. SHANKS. I will ask consent to have read a resolution which I think will settle this whole question.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I object to any resolution.

Mr. SHANKS. I believe it will settle this whole question, and I ask to have it read, for I think it will save a great deal of time.

The Clerk began to read as follows:

We recognize the equality of all men——

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I object.

Mr. SHANKS. That is from the Baltimore platform of 1872.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Read it to your Indians.

Mr. SHANKS. The Indians are all right; it is the white people who object now.

Mr. ROBBINS. I object to casting pearls before swine.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I move that the gentleman have leave to get his republican friends around him and read it to them himself.

Mr. SHANKS. We read it during the last election; I hope no one will object to it now.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman need not shake his gory locks at me.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] by substituting Friday for Saturday as the day to which the House will adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that motion would not now be in order, as the House on its last vote refused to agree to such a motion. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDREDGE,] that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet Saturday next; and on that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 57, nays 127, not voting 104; as follows:

Smith, Southard, Speer, Stanard, Stephens, Storm, Swann, Thompson, Tremain, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, Wolfe, and Woodworth—104.

So the motion was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. WOLFE. On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. PACKARD; if here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Supposing that the next motion would be a motion to adjourn for the day, Mr. SLOAN, of Georgia and myself paired. I should have voted "ay" on the motion to adjourn for the day; but as this is a motion to adjourn until Saturday, I will vote "no," and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SLOAN] if here would vote "no" also.

Mr. FINCK. My colleagues, Mr. NEAL and Mr. ROBINSON, are paired upon this question. If present Mr. NEAL would vote "ay," and Mr. ROBINSON "no."

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I have been requested to announce that Mr. SMITH, of Ohio, is paired with Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana. If present I suppose Mr. HOLMAN would vote "ay," and Mr. SMITH would vote "no."

Mr. POTTER. I am paired upon this question with Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not know how he would vote if he were here; but if I were at liberty to vote I should vote "ay" on this question.

Mr. KNAPP. I am paired with Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio; if present he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. McDILL, of Iowa. On this and subsequent votes this evening my colleague, Mr. KASSON, is paired with Judge NIBLACK, of Indiana. If present Mr. KASSON would vote "no" on this question, and Judge NIBLACK would vote "ay."

Mr. EAMES. For an hour longer, or until seven o'clock this evening, my colleague, Mr. PENDLETON, is paired with Mr. STORM, of Pennsylvania, on this and other questions. If present my colleague would vote "no" on this question, and Mr. STORM would vote "ay."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. On all these dilatory motions Mr. STANARD, of Missouri, is paired with Mr. COMINGO, of Missouri; if present Mr. STANARD would vote "no," and Mr. COMINGO would vote "ay."

Mr. O'BRIEN. On this motion I am paired with Mr. TREMAIN, of New York; if he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. CONGER. My colleague, Mr. BEGOLE, is paired with Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Mr. BEGOLE if here would vote "no," and Mr. STEPHENS would vote "ay."

Mr. RANDALL. I now call for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. TYNER in the chair.) The pending motion is that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next.

Mr. CESSNA. That is not the pending motion, but the motion that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the motion pending is that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next.

Mr. CESSNA. The Speaker ruled that motion out of order when it was made by my colleague, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL. That is my motion, and I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. BURROWS and others called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, and Mr. POTTER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were 42 in the affirmative.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No further count is called for; that is sufficient.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I call for a further count; that is not one-fifth of the whole number of members of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide that one-fifth of a quorum is sufficient to order the yeas and nays; and therefore the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Well, I am glad to learn how many it takes to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is it in order for two-thirds of the republicans here to go home, and leave one-third to watch proceedings for a time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If it is in order, we are willing that they shall all go home until the 3d of March.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 59, nays 122, not voting 107; as follows:

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The yeas and nays have been demanded.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, were appointed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Does not the demand for the yeas and nays take precedence of the demand for tellers?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONGER. I demanded them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will take their places.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51——

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not ask for a further count, but demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HAZELTON, of New Jersey. According to the best of my knowledge and belief, my colleagues, Mr. WARD and Mr. HAMILTON, are paired.

Mr. ADAMS. On this question I am paired with Mr. EAMES, of Rhode Island.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BECK. We will excuse all you gentlemen on that side of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. My throat is in such a condition that I cannot remain in this atmosphere with impunity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CESSNA in the chair.) The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to be excused from further attendance on the present session of the House. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the gentleman is excused.

Mr. BECK. Is there anybody else on the other side who wants to be excused?

Mr. CONGER. If there are any other gentlemen who have sore throats let them come forward now.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that all the gentlemen on the other side of the House be excused from further attendance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is not now dividing; and the Clerk will read the last clause of the sixty-fifth rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Smoking is prohibited within the bar of the House or gallery.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask to have that rule enforced. I do it for the benefit of various persons within the House.

Mr. RANDALL. That is right.

Mr. SPEER. Do the other side intend to smoke us out?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks for the enforcement of the rule against smoking, and the officers of the House are requested to see that the rule is enforced.

Mr. BECK. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to adjourn has been made and entertained, but a vote has not been taken on it.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would be in order to make the request.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do so.

Many members objected.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Would it be in order to move that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] have leave to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. That motion would not be in order. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next. On that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

So the House refused to adjourn over until Friday.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the House adjourn, and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 48, more than one-fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next, and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 40, more than one-fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LAMAR. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky by making it Saturday instead of Friday, and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALBRIGHT demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ALBRIGHT and Mr. LAMAR were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 48, more than one-fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will first be taken on the motion to adjourn over till Saturday.

Mr. SHANKS. Mr. Speaker, is it now in order to move to insert the first section of the democratic platform of 1872?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not germane to the subject under consideration.

Mr. COOK. I am glad the gentleman from Indiana is studying the democratic platform, and I hope it will work some improvement in him.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask to have it read.

Mr. SCHELL. I have no objections if you will leave out specie payments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Yes; I object.

Mr. SHANKS. Do I understand there is no objection?

Mr. RANDALL. Let the gentleman also read a plank of the republican platform of 1860.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not take advantage of gentlemen if they will only allow him to put the question. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent——

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. And I object.

Mr. SHANKS rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia objects and he has the right to object, and the gentleman from Indiana is not in order.

Mr. SHANKS. Do I understand there is objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is.

Mr. SHANKS. A valid objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is not in order.

Mr. FORT. Is it in order now to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not now. Gentlemen will have to sit here a little while longer before a motion to suspend the rules is in order.

Mr. SHANKS rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana will be seated.

Mr. SHANKS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot hear it at this time.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I withdraw my objection, provided the gentleman will also have read General Sheridan's telegram.

Several MEMBERS. Agreed! Agreed!

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I was going to make that motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope we will stop this trifling and go on with the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will preserve order. The gentleman from Georgia cannot make a conditional withdrawal of his objection. The only question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to adjourn until Saturday next, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I raised the point of order to prevent trifling here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No matter what the motive was, the Clerk must proceed with the call of the roll.

Mr. SHANKS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is too late; the roll-call has commenced.

Mr. SHANKS. All right; I will come in again.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 63, nays 131, not voting 95; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Coburn, Cook, Crittenden, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Finck, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Henry R. Harris, John T. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hyde, Hynes, Kasson, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, James W. McDill, McNulta, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Negley, Niles, O'Neill, Orr, Page, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Phillips, Pierce, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sessions, Shanks, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloan, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Sprague, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thompson, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tyner, Waldron, White, Whiteley, Wilber, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—131.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Atkins, Barnum, Bass, Buckner, Burchard, Roderick R. Butler, Chittenden, Freeman Clarke, Comingo, Cox, Creamer, Crooke, Crossland, Curtis, Danford, Dawes, DeWitt, Duell, Eden, Farwell, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Hamilton, Hancock, Harmer, Havens, John B. Hawley, Hays, Hendee, Herndon, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hooper, Hoskins, Hurlbut, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Lamport, Leach, Lofland, Marshall, Alexander S. Stevens, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Tremain, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Charles W. Willard, Wolfe, Wood, Woodworth, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—95.

So the motion was not agreed to.

During the vote the following proceedings took place:

Mr. HAGANS. I move that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. WILLIE. I object.

The Clerk proceeded to read the names of the members recorded as having voted.

Mr. STORM. Before the vote is announced, I rise to a question of privilege. I heard in the Clerk's reading of the roll-call the name of Mr. GARFIELD recorded as voting in the negative. I submit that the gentleman was not here during the vote and did not vote, and that his name should not be on the list.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CESSNA.) The name of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is recorded on the roll-call in the negative. It is impossible for the Chair to know whether the gentleman voted or not.

Mr. STORM. If that principle of voting is adopted, I should like to go home.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania know that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] did not vote?

Mr. STORM. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is happy to inform the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the vote of the gentleman from Ohio will not change the result.

Mr. STORM. I know that; but I want to know whether a member can go home and at the same time be recorded as voting here?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I agree fully with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that gentlemen who are not here should not have their names recorded as voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] if there is an error, will have ample opportunity to correct it to-morrow.

Mr. STORM. The error should be corrected before the vote is announced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not desire to contradict the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but he does not consider that this is a privileged question to raise at this time.

Mr. LAMAR. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know of the Chair whether the roll-call cannot be corrected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll-call can be corrected.

Mr. LAMAR. I make the inquiry in good faith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no doubt of that.

Mr. LAMAR. The question of correcting the roll was raised just now, and I understood the Chair to rule that such a question could not be raised at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is a question of fact as to whether the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] voted. That question cannot be raised at this time, because no other question is in order pending this motion to adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. It is too late to raise the question after the vote is announced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio can correct the roll-call if his name has been improperly recorded.

Mr. RANDALL. The allegation is that he is not here.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Suppose it should turn out that the gentleman is dead?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In that case his colleague could announce the fact.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Suppose that the vote of the gentleman changed the result?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But it does not.

Mr. O'BRIEN. But suppose it did?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That question can be determined when it arises. The gentleman cannot raise that issue now.

Several members demanded the regular order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman cannot take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair is not entitled to announce the vote of a man who is not here.

Mr. ELDREDGE. What is the object of reading the roll, if it is not in order to correct it?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I recollect distinctly a decision being given by the Speaker—I do not know how long ago it was—of the very question now in issue. His decision was that it was proper to correct the record at the time it was made.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a question of order. I ask that gentlemen shall be in their seats.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will please be seated. It is impossible for the Chair to determine, as a matter of fact, whether the record of the vote of the gentleman from Ohio be correct or not. The Chair does not know whether the gentleman voted or not.

Mr. STORM. He did not vote.

Mr. LAMAR. I wish to know if the Clerk's call of the roll is conclusive upon the House at the time as to the fact of the presence of the members whose votes are there recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is, unless the gentleman himself whose name is recorded makes the correction.

Mr. LAMAR. Then, according to the ruling of the Chair, it is an incorrigible error.

Mr. O'BRIEN. How can a gentleman correct the record of his vote if he is not present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He will have ample opportunity to do so if he did not vote.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to this aspect of the question: Suppose a vote was taken on a motion to adjourn, and declared to be carried in consequence of the vote of a member who was known to all of us not to have been here in the House, and whose name had been recorded by mistake by the Clerk; is it not the privilege of the body, and not merely of the member, that an erroneous entry of the vote shall not be made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But when and how does the gentleman propose to have that fact ascertained?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I suppose that if it is brought up as a question of privilege or on a point of order, the correction of the vote at the time may be made by the body if it produced an erroneous result. I suppose when the roll is called, which is for the purpose of all of us hearing it, the proper time to call the attention of the Chair to the error would be at the close of the call, and before the result of the vote was declared.

Mr. BLAINE, (the Speaker.) This, I think, will govern the case. The testimony is all on one side. It is not disputed that there was evidently a mistake. There are no two points in the controversy before the Chair. There is an allegation here that the gentleman from Ohio did not vote; there is no allegation that he did. If there were a disputed point it must, of course, be determined by testimony, but there is no disputed point. The fact stated is uncontradicted, and therefore, with all due respect to the Chair, I think the error should be corrected.

Mr WILSON, of Iowa. I submit on this point, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Ohio, as a member of the House, is entitled to vote, and I question if any man can state authoritatively, beyond all question, that Mr. GARFIELD did not vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Who denies it?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not know whether he has voted or not.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I say that he was not here to vote.

Mr. STORM. And I say that he did not vote upon the previous vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does any gentleman have knowledge of the fact that Mr. GARFIELD was present and voted?

Mr. SHANKS. It is an affirmative proposition and not a negative one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The statement is made that Mr. GARFIELD was not here and did not vote. If no member asserts to the contrary, the Chair will direct his name to be stricken from the roll.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The Speaker was in error in this, that parties on the outside of the bar might answer to the name of every absentee and be counted, and by so doing would defraud the House of its rights.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It having been asserted that Mr. GARFIELD was not present and did not vote, and nobody asserting to the contrary, the roll will be corrected accordingly, and his name will be stricken from it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already decided the question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to say that it is unwarrantable to take a member from the floor, after having given him the floor, without allowing him to state what he rose to state. You may be making a very dangerous precedent here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Iowa assert that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] was present and voted?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Iowa desired to have the floor and had the floor assigned to him; and suddenly, and before he had well commenced what he desired to say, the Chair saw fit to take him from his feet and decided the very question on which he desired to speak.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa was not denied any right that has been accorded to other members.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It would at least have been more courteous to have heard what I had to say before deciding the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is decided. Upon the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to amend the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky the yeas were 65 and the nays 134. So the amendment is not agreed to, and the question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. SHANKS. Will it now be in order to read the first section of the democratic platform of 1872?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have read also a passage from the republican platform of 1860.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No motion or business is in order except the motion to adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. By unanimous consent let us have both these passages from the platforms read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot ascertain whether there is unanimous consent or not unless gentlemen will come to order and be seated.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move that the eighth commandment be read.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I move that the gentleman from California have leave to read the eighth commandment.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. There would be no objection if they would allow us to read the republican platform of 1860.

Several MEMBERS. Read them both.

Other MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] proposes that by unanimous consent the gentleman from Indiana [Mr SHANKS] be permitted to read what he proposes on condition that some other document be read.

Mr. RANDALL. I only ask that a plank in the platform of the republican party adopted in Baltimore in 1860 be read.

Mr. SENER. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. WADDELL. I ask unanimous consent that, for the benefit of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] with the ambrosial curls, the seventh commandment be read.

Mr. CLEMENTS. It would no doubt be beneficial to the other side of the House.

Mr. SENER. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. SHANKS. What became of that proposition in relation to my curls?

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Your curls are out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection has been made to anything but the regular order.

Mr. SHANKS. Do I understand that I am allowed to read this portion of the democratic platform?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not.

Mr. SHANKS. O! I thought I was.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Neither the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS,] nor the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] has authority to read anything. The only thing in order is the calling of the roll on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. MYERS. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MYERS. Unanimous consent was asked by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] to read a certain paper, and the Chair announced that it was granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not so announce.

Mr. MYERS. Afterward the Chair stated that objection was made. My point of order is that the objection comes too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] is mistaken as to the fact; the Chair did not so announce.

Mr. SHANKS. Do I understand now that I may read this platform?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot say what the gentleman from Indiana understands.

Mr. SHANKS. There is so much noise I cannot hear.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands fully that the gentleman is not permitted to read it. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

A MEMBER. On what?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next.

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Cook, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Finck, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hereford, Hunton, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Luttrell, Magee, Milliken, Mills, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Perry, Randall, Read, Robbins, Milton Sayler, Schell, Stone, Storm, Swann, Vance, Waddell, Wells, Whitehead, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Barrere, Barry, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Crounse, Crutchfield, Darrall, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Field, Fort, Gooch, Gunckel, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Benjamin W. Shoemaker, Sloan, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, Sprague, Stanard, Charles A. Stevens, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thompson, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tyner, Waldron, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, White, Wilber, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—131.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Atkins, Averill, Barber, Barnum, Bass, Buckner, Burchard, Roderick R. Butler, Chittenden, Freeman Clarke, Clinton L. Cobb, Coburn, Comingo, Cox, Creamer, Crooke, Curtis, Danford, Dawes, DeWitt, Eden, Farwell, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, John B. Hawley, Hays, Hendee, Herndon, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hooper, Hoskins, Hurlbut, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Lamport, Lansing, Leach, Lofland, Marshall, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, Mitchell, Morey, Morrison, Nunn, Orth, Packer, Page, Parsons, Phelps, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Purman, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Rusk, Henry J. Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Sloss, George L. Smith, John Q. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Southard, Speer, Standiford, Starkweather, Alexander H. Stephens, Strawbridge, Tremain, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiteley, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, Wood, and Woodworth—95.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. SNYDER said: On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. HERNDON; if here he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of the very highest privilege. If the House will come to order I will state it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman after the announcement of the result of the roll-call just completed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to have a correction of the roll-call. I have been examining the rolls, and I find that the names of three members are there who have been voted for steadily, or not steadily but interchangeably, for the last three or four roll-calls. They are gentlemen who, to my certain knowledge, are not and have not been in the House, for I have been looking for them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlemen from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] must confine his point to the roll now before the Chair.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I think we can find means to get at it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Are the names of those gentlemen on the present roll-call? If so, I would like to read what Cushing says about it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say that CHARLES FOSTER, JAMES A. GARFIELD, and EUGENE HALE have been put upon three roll-calls as voting, some of them on four, and they have not been here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that neither of those gentlemen are recorded as having voted on the last roll-call, the only one not announced.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I know that; I made a fuss about it before this roll-call was completed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to entertain the point of order in regard to any vote which has already been announced. If there is any objection to any name recorded on this roll-call, the Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Well, we will correct it some way; that thing cannot be done in this manner.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now announce the result of the last roll-call. On the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next the yeas are 63 and the nays 131. The motion is not agreed to. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that the House adjourn.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order. Under the rule read from the chair this morning, no motion is in order at this stage except to adjourn or to fix the time to which the House will adjourn, unless the House should find itself without a quorum, when the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] would be in order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I suggest that the call of the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn be withdrawn, in order that a motion may be made to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn; and then let us see whether we can not have a call of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] moves to reconsider the vote whereby the yeas and nays were ordered on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is it.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays cannot be taken on the question of ordering the yeas and nays; therefore the motion to reconsider such order cannot be taken by yeas and nays.

The question being taken on the motion to reconsider, it was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. RANDALL. Now put the question on adjournment.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to adopt the amendment proposing to fix Friday next as the time to which the House shall adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman has not the right to make that motion, because he did not vote with the prevailing side. I make that motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER, (Mr. BLAINE having resumed the chair.) Will the gentleman from Massachusetts state his motion again?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The House has just refused to fix Friday next as the day to which it will adjourn. I move to reconsider that vote. I voted in the negative.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order that when it adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. ELDREDGE. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. RANDALL. That is right.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 72, nays 123, not voting 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Barber, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Caldwell, Cason, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Stephen A. Cobb, Cook, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Finck, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Averill, Barrere, Barry, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Stephens, Strawbridge, Tremain, Waldron, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Charles W. Willard, Wood, and Woodworth—94.

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. SHANKS. Would it now be in order for me to introduce the first section of the democratic platform of 1872?

Several MEMBERS. Read it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. If gentlemen on the other side are to read our platform, we ought to have the privilege of reading theirs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to having both read?

Mr. ELDREDGE. We will consent, provided the gentleman will also have read the essay of our minister to England on poker.

Mr. RANDALL. Let both platforms come in; that is fair.

Mr. SHANKS. I offer this, Mr. Speaker, as a substitute for the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to its being read.

Mr. RANDALL. I object, unless both are read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

The SPEAKER. That was the last motion.

Mr. ELDREDGE. But business has intervened.

The SPEAKER. But only to confirm it by reconsideration.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Then I will make it Saturday.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Tellers on the yeas and nays have been demanded on the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PACKARD and Mr. MILLIKEN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 50, more than one-fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I now move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. ROBBINS demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. SCHELL demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SOUTHARD and Mr. SENER were appointed.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I make the point of order that it is the duty of gentlemen to take their seats, so that when we have a division of the House by tellers members shall go from their seats to pass through the tellers.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not wish to be appointed teller if they are to go through me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 45, more than one-fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK (at twenty-five minutes to two o'clock a. m.) I move to amend by inserting Friday instead of Saturday, and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STONE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HATCHER and Mr. HYNES were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 44, more than one-fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I rise to a point of order, that after the tellers have reported the affirmative it is not proper any more should be counted on that side until the other side have passed through the tellers.

The SPEAKER. That is a point the Chair has been anxious oftentimes to enforce, but some members will go through and insist on being counted.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If the Chair would only enforce it instead of being anxious about it it would be all right.

The SPEAKER. It is because there are so many gentlemen on the floor like the gentleman from Wisconsin who will not do what the Chair desires.

Mr. CONGER. I think it is due to members to say there were none who desired to vote in the negative.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 66, nays 134, not voting 89; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Beck, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, Cessna, John B. So the House refused to adjourn till Friday.

During the vote,

Mr. COBURN stated that he was paired with Mr. BUCKNER, who, if present, would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CESSNA in the chair, at ten minutes past two o'clock a. m.) The question now recurs on the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 123, not voting 101; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. So the motion was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. COBURN said: On this vote I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BUCKNER. If he were present he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion that the House do now adjourn, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move that the House take a recess until ten o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion cannot be entertained.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Would it be in order now to allow the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS,] who I observe has risen for that purpose, to read what he holds in his hand?

Mr. SHANKS. I rise to a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is obliged to inform gentlemen that no motion except the motion to adjourn and the motion to fix a day to which the House shall adjourn is in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHANKS. I ask unanimous consent to make a personal explanation.

Mr. SENER and others objected.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 68, nays 119, not voting 102; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. Willard, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, and Woodworth—102.

So (at three o'clock a. m. Thursday, January 28,) the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday. I think this will meet the views of the House now when we have arrived at this late hour of the night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not open to debate.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I was not debating the motion. I was merely making a suggestion.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. CONGER. My point of order is that the Chair fails to recognize any gentleman on this side of the House to make motions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is overruled. It gives the Chair great pleasure to recognize any gentleman on that side of the House.

Mr. SHANKS. Then I ask the Chair to recognize me. I rise to make a personal explanation.

Several members objected.

Mr. ELDREDGE. O, let the gentleman make his explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the Chair cannot entertain the request of the gentleman from Indiana. The question is on the motion that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday.

Mr. ELDREDGE. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, called for tellers on the question of ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. ELDREDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 51.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether it is in order to raise the question of consideration? If it is, I will raise that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of consideration upon what?

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. Upon the pending bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order at present.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the pending motion by striking out "Friday" and inserting "Saturday;" and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHANKS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Mr. Speaker, I hope you will let the gentleman rise.

Mr. SHANKS. My inquiry is this: Is not a motion to adjourn to a day certain debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 45.

Mr. CONGER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SHANKS and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] be required to return the democratic platform.

Mr. SHANKS. If I am to act as teller I ought to have some privileges here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will take their places.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 46.

Several MEMBERS. Count the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no occasion for counting the other side, as the affirmative is more than one-fifth of the last vote; and the yeas and nays are therefore ordered under the provisions of the Constitution.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 60, nays 109, not voting 120; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Cook, Crittenden, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Finck, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Henry R. Wilson, Wood, and Woodworth—120.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. ELDREDGE, that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next, upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 59, nays 115, not voting 115; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BECK, (at four o'clock and twenty minutes a. m., Thursday, January 28.) I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SHANKS. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to make a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Are there objections to the gentleman from Indiana making a personal explanation?

Many MEMBERS. O, no.

Other MEMBERS. Object!

Mr. SHANKS. I believe no objection has been made to my proceeding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair heard a number.

Mr. SHANKS. I have not heard any.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may not have heard them, but the Chair heard quite a number.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I think there would be no objection to the gentleman proceeding if my friend from Oregon [Mr. NESMITH] were permitted to reply to him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objections are made all round, and the request of the gentleman is not in order. The gentleman from Kentucky has moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BECK. And on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call for tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. O'BRIEN and Mr. BECK were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were 46 in the affirmative.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call for a count of the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. More than one-fifth of the last vote having voted for the yeas and nays, they are ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next, and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAGE and others called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. E. R. HOAR, (occupying the seat of Mr. NEGLEY.) I rise to a point of order and ask the Chair to direct gentlemen to take their seats.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will resume their seats.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I raise the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] is not in his own seat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman owning the seat will not complain.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I complain of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the complaint.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I supposed he would; if we had a democrat in the chair he would not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules that point also.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I supposed the Chair would.

Tellers were ordered upon the call for the yeas and nays; and Mr. PAGE and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

Mr. RANDALL. Were there not sufficient voting for tellers to order the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question was not submitted with that view.

The House divided upon ordering the yeas and nays; and the tellers reported that there were 40 in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That being more than one-fifth of the last vote, the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to say——

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. POTTER said: I desire to announce that my colleague from New York, Mr. PLATT, went home during the night on account of illness. Had he been here, he would have voted in the negative upon these several motions for adjournment.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. SHANKS. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. SHANKS. It is that I wish to make a personal explanation; and I do it upon the ground that I have been misrepresented by the Speaker of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks to make a personal explanation. It requires unanimous consent.

Several members objected.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. DURHAM. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MERRIAM. I ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MERRIAM and Mr. DURHAM were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 51, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] by striking out Friday and inserting Saturday. On this motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, and Mr. ELDREDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 44, more than one-fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to strike out Friday and insert Saturday.

Mr. SHANKS. I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. SHANKS. I desire to make a personal explanation.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Is it not in order for the gentleman to strike himself out?

Mr. WILBER. Is an amendment in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. WILBER. I am sorry, as we have tried this so many times, and I should like to move another day.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 51, nays 97, not voting 141; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Atkins, Averill, Barber, Barnum, Bass, Berry, Biery, Buckner, Burchard, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Chittenden, Freeman Clarke, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Cox, Creamer, Crooke, Crossland, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, DeWitt, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Eden, Eldredge, Farwell, Fort, Frye, Garfield, Giddings, Gunckel, Gunter, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, John T. So the House rejected the amendment to adjourn till Saturday next.

Mr. SHANKS. I move when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet after the reading of the resolution which I send up to the Clerk's desk. Is that in order?

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. WILBER. I insist the House on this side——

Mr. SHANKS. I move the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] have the privilege of withdrawing his objection.

Mr. WILBER. I insist the House on the democratic side have been sitting day after day, Friday and Saturday, long enough.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will offer his amendment, if he have one.

Mr. WILBER. I move we set the day to which we will adjourn immediately after the passage of the civil-rights bill. We will all agree to that.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I ask the Clerk to read the following on the proposition now pending——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order unless by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent.

Several members objected.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. There will be no objection if my friends on the other side will listen to it for one moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to inform the gentleman that his friends on the other side will not listen to it.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I see they are beyond reason.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 56, nays 103, not voting 130; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. So the motion was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. POTTER said: On the various votes during the night on which I have not voted I have been paired with Mr. CHARLES W. WILLARD, of Vermont. If he had been here he would on each of those occasions have voted "no," and I would have voted "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BECK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SHANKS. I move that the House shall not adjourn until the reading of the following resolution——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] is not in order.

Mr. SHANKS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I have been waiting all night to get in this thing.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call for the yeas and nays on the appeal of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SYPHER. I move the gentleman from Indiana be allowed to make his speech, and that the gentleman from Maryland be allowed to sing a song.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has repeatedly ruled, in accordance with the ruling of the Speaker of the House, that there are but three motions in order except by unanimous consent. If the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SYPHER] desires to make his motion he can ask unanimous consent. But without that his motion cannot be entertained.

Mr. McKEE. What becomes of the appeal?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has also ruled, and the Speaker of the House before him, that no appeal can be taken pending this question.

Mr. SHANKS. Then I am to understand that I am about cleaned out?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not responsible for the gentleman's understanding.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I would like to know who is?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not suppose that it is the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDREDGE.]

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to take a recess is not in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I call for tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ROBBINS. I demand tellers on the question of ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ROBBINS, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 42.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And I call for tellers on the question of ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order to make a parliamentary inquiry when the House is dividing.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. It will be too late after the House shall have divided.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 41.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to amend the motion of my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] by inserting Saturday instead of Friday; and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROBBINS. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know whether we are allowed mileage for this travel in passing between the tellers?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Only actual expenses.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. You have been on a fool's errand all night, and you don't get anything for that.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. CLYMER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 40.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are again three questions pending: first, that the House adjourn; second, that when it adjourns it be to meet on Friday; and, third, that this motion be amended by striking out Friday and inserting Saturday. On all these motions the yeas and nays have been ordered. The first question will be on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] to strike out Friday and insert Saturday.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 49, nays 112, not voting 128; as follows:

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. MILLS. My colleague, Mr. HANCOCK, is absent in consequence of indisposition, but is paired with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. If here he would vote "ay" upon this question, and Mr. O'NEILL would vote "no."

Mr. WILBER. I desire to state that I am paired with Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, on this question. If he were here he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. RANDALL, that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next, on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion that the House adjourn, on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. COMINGO. I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess for one hour.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. No, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 54, nays 102, not voting 133; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday next; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for tellers on ordering the the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONGER. Could not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] vary the proceeding a little by naming Saturday?

Mr. RANDALL. The old tune is so harmonious that I do not like to change it.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 50, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] by striking out Friday and inserting Saturday.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Would it be in order to move to amend by naming Saturday morning at nine o'clock?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDREDGE.]

Mr. ELDREDGE. I knew the gentleman would help us after awhile.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, there is a sufficient number.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. ELDREDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 42, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 41, nays 87, not voting 161; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Ashe, Banning, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Giddings, Gunter, Henry R. During the roll-call,

Mr. KNAPP said: On this vote I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LAWRENCE, who, if present, would vote in the negative while I would vote in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was then announced—no quorum voting.

Mr. HEREFORD. Is it in order to move to take up the post-office appropriation bill?

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion for a call of the House is not yet in order. The motion for adjournment comes first.

Mr. RANDALL. I made that motion, and on it demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MAYNARD. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, what is the condition of the former motions?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They stand precisely where they did before. There are two propositions now pending undecided.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I believe, Mr. Speaker, there was no quorum voting on the last vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that very well; and that is the very reason that the Chair will entertain the motion to adjourn.

Mr. MAYNARD. If this motion to adjourn should be voted down, will a motion for a call of the House be then in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not, if a quorum should be found present.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. When will the motion for a call of the House be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule on that question when it arises, if it should arise. Should no quorum vote on the motion to adjourn, the Chair will entertain a motion for a call of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I am informed—I do not know whether it is true or not—that no quorum voted on the last vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that fully before he made his ruling.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw my call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONGER. As there was no quorum on the last vote, I would like to inquire whether it is in order to move a call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not at this time, pending the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I would ask the Chair the reason of that ruling?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reason is that there is a motion to adjourn now pending, which takes precedence of the motion for a call of the House.

Mr. CONGER. If the Chair pleases, I would like to have read the rule which prevents a call of the House when we find ourselves without a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule was read at the beginning of the session this morning by the Speaker.

Mr. O'NEILL. It has not been read by the present occupant of the chair. We consider you, sir, the Speaker for the time being, with full power and capacity to rule upon these questions, and you ought to do it.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a motion has been once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, it shall be in order for any member of the majority to move for the reconsideration thereof on the same or succeeding day; and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions except a motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That rule, if the Chair pleases, does not touch at all upon the question whether this House, finding itself without a quorum, cannot send for absentees.

Mr. McKEE. Let the rule on that subject be read.

Mr. CONGER. I did not ask for the reading of the rule in regard to priority of motions; and I do not think the reading of it was a proper answer to a proper question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let us have the rule on this point read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has just had read the rule on this point, the only rule there is governing the subject. There is a motion pending to reconsider, and a motion to adjourn can be entertained for another reason: that is that it does not require a quorum to determine it one way or the other. Perhaps by the time the roll is called upon this question a quorum may be present. If not, it will be time enough then to move a call of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the Chair to read the rule bearing directly on the point I now raise, which is this: When the House of Representatives finds itself without a quorum, a motion to adjourn is in order, I admit; but that motion being voted down, then it is in order for the majority of those present, though less than a quorum, to order that the absentees be sent for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But whether there be a quorum present or not, upon the consideration of a motion to reconsider, a motion to adjourn is in order. That motion has precedence; and it may be entertained whether there be a quorum present or not. That motion is in order at this time. The pending question is upon the motion to adjourn; upon which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But, Mr. Speaker, allow me a moment——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understood the Chair to rule that after a motion to adjourn had been voted down by less than a quorum, we could not then send for absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not so rule, because there has been no motion to adjourn voted down. There was a motion to fix Saturday as the day to which the House would adjourn, which was voted down.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, Then I misunderstood the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Several members renewed the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MAYNARD and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 44, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am ashamed that the republican side of the House should go to filibustering at this late hour of the session.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 54, nays 91, not voting 144; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Ashe, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Henry R. Harris, John T. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—54.

NAYS—Messrs. Barber, Barrere, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Cain, Cason, Cessna, Clayton, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Corwin, Crounse, Darrall, Dobbins, Donnan, Dunnell, Field, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Hagans, Harmer, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hodges, Hubbell, Hunter, Hyde, Hynes, Lansing, Lawson, Lewis, Lowe, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, James W. McDill, McKee, McNulta, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Negley, Packard, Page, Parsons, Pelham, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Rainey, Rapier, Ray, Ross, Rusk, Sener, Sheats, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloan, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, and James Wilson—91.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Archer, Atkins, Averill, Banning, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Begole, Berry, Brown, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cannon, Carpenter, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clements, Comingo, Cotton, Crooke, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Dawes, DeWitt, Duell, Eames, Eden, Farwell, Finck, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, Hays, Hendee, Herndon, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hurlbut, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Lamport, Lawrence, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowndes, Marshall, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, Mitchell, Morey, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, Niles, Nunn, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packer, Hosea W. Parker, Isaac C. Parker, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, Potter, Pratt, Purman, Ransier, Read, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Shanks, Sherwood, George L. Smith, John Q. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Starkweather, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles A. Stevens, Storm, Strait, Swann, Sypher, Taylor, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thompson, Tremain, Tyner, Waldron, Walls, Wells, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, and Woodworth—144.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the vote,

Mr. SPEER said: I paired last night with Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, who has not yet reached the Hall, and therefore I will not vote on this roll-call.

Mr. ATKINS said: I have paired with the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HAYS,] who has not yet reached the Hall, and I decline to vote.

Mr. O'NEILL said: I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that on the last four or five roll-calls I have been paired with Mr. HANCOCK, of Texas, and the pair does not expire until after this vote. He would vote in the affirmative, while I would vote in the negative on this and the other votes to adjourn and adjourn over.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This vote develops the presence of a quorum; and the question now recurs upon the question during the voting upon which the House found itself without a quorum.

Mr. SENER. How does 52 and 92 make a quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that it is one over a quorum.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. Fifty-two and 92 do not constitute a quorum of this House.

Mr. SPEER. That would make the full House consist only of 280 members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hundred and forty-six members have voted; and, according to information from the Clerk, 145 is a quorum.

Mr. SPEER. One hundred and forty-six have not voted, according to the announcement of the Chair.

Mr. MAYNARD. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPEER. The regular order is to know whether we have a quorum here or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair made a mistake in the announcement; it should be 54 to 91, and not 52 to 92.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Gentlemen who have been in bed all night should have some mercy upon those who have been in constant attendance and have just gone to get their breakfast.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn is not agreed to; and the question recurs on the amendment to the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday by striking out Friday and inserting Saturday, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 56, nays 100, not voting 133; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clarke, jr., Clymer, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Finck, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Henry R. Harris, John T. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Albright, Atkins, Averill, Barber, Barnum, Bass, Berry, Biery, Brown, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Comingo, Cotton, Creamer, Crooke, Crounse, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, DeWitt, Donnan, Dunnell, Eames, Eden, Farwell, Fort, Foster, Frye, Garfield, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, Harrison, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Herndon, Hersey, E. Thomas, Thompson, Tremain, Tyner, Waldron, Walls, Wells, Wheeler, Whitehead, Whiteley, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—133.

So the House rejected the amendment to adjourn over till Saturday next.

During the vote,

Mr. SOUTHARD said: Mr. Speaker, on all roll-calls on adjournments and adjournments over I have been paired with my colleague, Mr. SHERWOOD, who is still absent. If he were here he would vote in the negative, while I would vote in the affirmative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question recurred on the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn till Friday next, on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 51, nays 125, not voting 113; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, John B. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Albright, Atkins, Averill, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Berry, Biery, Bradley, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. So the motion to adjourn over till Friday was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. WOLFE. I am paired with Mr. PACKARD, of Indiana. If here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. MILLS. I am paired with Mr. NEGLEY, of Pennsylvania. If he were present he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. MOORE. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. He would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. LAWRENCE. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with Mr. KNAPP, of Illinois. If here he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If we do not have a quorum I shall object to these withdrawals.

Mr. COX. I am paired with Mr. TREMAIN, of New York, on the main question of the civil-rights bill. As these motions for adjournment are inconsequential questions, I am not certain whether I am paired on them or not; but I prefer to withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the House do now adjourn. It seems to me that after this long session we ought to adjourn. I think the House is in a temper to do so.

Mr. SYPHER. Has the gentleman had his breakfast?

Mr. CESSNA. I object to debate.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDREDGE.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. MERRIAM. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know if it be in order at the present time to have the bill which is offered for consideration read before the House; for I know that not one in ten of the gentlemen on the floor of the House know what it contains. And I do not think it is courageous for men to fight that which they do not know.

Mr. BECK. We know all about it.

Mr. SPEER. Gentlemen can read the bill themselves.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I announced that the bill was printer's No. 4100.

Mr. MERRIAM. The minority of the House fear that it contains what it does not contain. If they read it, their objections to it I am sure would cease.

Mr. FIELD. If the gentleman had been here last night he would have heard the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS.]

Tellers were ordered on taking the question by yeas and nays; and Mr. BEGOLE and Mr. WILBER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 40.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next.

The SPEAKER. That motion has just been decided and no other business has since intervened.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Has not a motion to adjourn intervened?

Mr. BECK. Then I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Saturday.

Mr. O'BRIEN. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. And I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CHITTENDEN and Mr. O'BRIEN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 38.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to a parliamentary question, whether a motion of this sort would be in order, that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday; or must the longest time be taken first?

The SPEAKER. That rule only applies to filling blanks.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If we should adjourn now would not the standing rule require us to adjourn until Friday?

The SPEAKER. This is still Wednesday's session.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, I forgot; it has been long-enough for two days any way.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky by striking out Saturday and inserting Friday.

Mr. HAMILTON. And on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for tellers on the question of ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. EAMES and Mr. WILLIE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 41.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] to insert Friday instead of Saturday as the day to which the House will adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 61, nays 140, not voting 88; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Finck, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Thomas, Thompson, Todd, Townsend, Tyner, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, White, Whiteley, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodworth—140.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Archer, Averill, Banning, Barnum, Bass, Berry, Biery, Freeman Clarke, Clinton L. Cobb, Coburn, Cox, Creamer, Crooke, Crounse, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, De Witt, Eden, Farwell, Foster, Frye, Hagans, John T. Harris, Havens, Hendee, Hersey, George F. Smith, Snyder, Southard, Alexander H. Stephens, St. John, Stowell, Charles R. Thomas, Thornburgh, Tremain, Waldron, Walls, Wheeler, and Willie—88.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. FARWELL. I am paired upon this question with Mr. MITCHELL, of Wisconsin. If here he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no."

Mr. ARCHER. Upon this question I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. PELHAM. If here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. BECK that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Saturday next, on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 57, nays 102, not voting 130; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Cook, Crittenden, Crossland, Durham, Eldredge, Finck, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Southard, Standiford, Starkweather, Alexander H. Stephens, Stowell, Swann, Sypher, Thornburgh, Tremain, Waldron, Walls, Wheeler, Willie, and Wood—130.

So the motion was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcement was made:

Mr. ARCHER. I am paired with Mr. PELHAM, of Alabama, who would have voted in the negative on this question.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. ELDREDGE that the House do now adjourn, on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. MCCRARY. Pending that motion I ask unanimous consent to present a resolution for reference to the Committee on the Rules.

Mr. SPEER and Mr. RANDALL objected.

Mr. ELDREDGE. That is the coolest proposition I have heard for a long time.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to make a proper parliamentary inquiry. Should the House now adjourn, it being five minutes to twelve o'clock, and the Speaker should call the House again to order at twelve o'clock, the hour at which by the rules he is required to call it to order, after the reading of the Journal of to-day's proceedings will this business on which we have been engaged during the legislative session of to-day be proceeded with?

The SPEAKER. Of course this business would come up as the unfinished business; but there is nothing that reqnires the session to terminate at twelve o'clock.

Mr. KASSON. I make the point with a view of keeping our records properly.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. The records are all right.

Mr. KASSON. I am not aware that the question has ever been ruled upon.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Then it would seem that to-day is yesterday and to-morrow too.

Mr. MAYNARD. There is no question before the House.

Mr. KASSON. I made a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a proper parliamentary inquiry, and, in answer to the gentleman, would say that of course, if the House should now adjourn, the unfinished business would come up at the commencement of its next day's session. The real pending business before the House is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] or rather the question raised by him of the consideration of the motion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] which motion is to reconsider the vote by which the House recommited this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KASSON. That would be the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. It would, and must remain so, unless disposed of by this House, until the end of this Congress.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I call the regular order, which is the motion to adjourn, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. McKEE. If there should be no adjournment of the House now, will the Speaker, at twelve o'clock, take the chair, and rule that a new day has begun?

The SPEAKER. We are now, according to usage, in the legislative day of Wednesday, January 27. The Chair knows and recognizes the fact that that involves some contradictions and apparent difficulties. At the same time it is the usage long continued and, so far as the Chair knows, unvaried.

Mr. McKEE. Then this day may last a week.

The SPEAKER. That is for the House to determine.

Mr. McKEE. I am glad to know that this is yesterday.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Has not the legislative day sometimes exceeded in length three calendar days?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that on one occasion, in 1854, a single legislative day extended over three calendar days.

Mr. ELDREDGE. There is nothing natural about a legislative day; it is all artificial.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SCOFIELD. It is whether there is any means within the rules of the House whereby the majority of the House may proceed to the consideration of public business, and break up this apparently endless chain of dilatory motions?

Mr. COX. Bring in your appropriation bills; we are ready to consider them.

The SPEAKER. As the rules now stand, it is of course in order to move to adjourn, and to alternate that motion with motions to fix the day to which the House will adjourn; and those motions can be renewed ad infinitum.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Could that be obviated by a change of the rules?

The SPEAKER. That is for the House to determine.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Suppose these motions to adjourn and to fix the time to which the House will adjourn are made when a proposition to change the rules is submitted to the House; how could we ever get at the matter then?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has repeatedly ruled that pending a proposition to change the rules dilatory motions could not be entertained, and for this reason: he has several times ruled that the right of each House to determine what shall be its rules is an organic right expressly given by the Constitution of the United States. The rules are the creature of that power, and of course they cannot be used to destroy the power. The House is incapable, by any form of rules, of divesting itself of its inherent constitutional power to exercise its function to determine its own rules. Therefore the Chair has always announced that upon a proposition to change the rules of the House he would never entertain a dilatory motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I raise the point that no notice has been given of a notice to change the rules.

The SPEAKER. There is no proposition pending of that kind; the Chair has only indicated what he would rule when such a proposition was submitted.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I had no proposition of that kind to make, and had not thought of any. I only wanted to know whether there was any way to break up this chain of dilatory motions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has repeatedly ruled that the House of Representatives is competent, by a vote of the majority, to do what it pleases under the Constitution of the United States; he has always maintained that ground.

Mr. McCRARY. Is it in order now to give notice of a motion to amend the rules?

Mr. ELDREDGE. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

Mr. McCRARY. If it is in order I desire to give that notice at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the process of amending the rules should be according to some prescribed mode. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCRARY] will observe that it would not do to hold that a proposition to amend the rules, made by any one member on the floor of the House, is a privileged proposition. If that were so, it would only give another form of dilatory motion. If a proposition to change the rules is privileged in the hands of one member, it would be equally privileged in the hands of two hundred and ninety-two members. Therefore the proposition to amend the rules should be through the regular channel of amendment. If amendments of the rules should be entertained upon the motion of any member, that would only give another and interminable form of dilatory motions, because, if it be privileged to amend one rule, it would be equally privileged to amend them all; and if the motion to amend by any one member is privileged, similar motions by all members would be equally privileged; there would be no end to such propositions. The House proceeds through channels of law and regular rules made pursuant to the Constitution of the United States. It is the high function of the House by that constitutional power to change its rules whenever the majority shall see fit to do so.

Mr. McCRARY. When will it be in order to give that notice, or to move to amend the rules?

The SPEAKER. On Monday during the call for bills and joint resolutions for reference.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Suppose the House should continue the session of to-day until Monday?

The SPEAKER. It is quite in the power of the majority, if they want to do so for any purpose, to effect an adjournment. The Chair only said that a majority could change the rules.

Mr. McCRARY. I am not sure that I have been understood. I desire to give notice that on to-morrow, or on some subsequent day, I will move to amend the rules.

Mr. RANDALL. That notice is not in order pending the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has always held, as members know who have observed, that on Monday morning, during the call of States for bills and joint resolutions for reference, concurrent resolutions for printing, and proposed amendments to the rules, are in order, for the reason that if not so receivable, there could be no other mode of getting them regularly before the House; and it never was in contemplation that the House should tie itself up beyond the power of change.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Could a proposed amendment to the rules be acted upon except it be reported from the Committee on Rules?

Mr. HYNES. The rules only require one day's notice to be given of a proposed change of the rule.

Mr. RANDALL. How are you to get that notice in?

Mr. HOSKINS. If notice is given on Monday, according to the decision of the Chair, of a proposed amendment of the rules, will it be in order for the Committee on Rules to report upon it at any time?

The SPEAKER. Of course; that is the undoubted function of the Committee on Rules, to report at any time.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I call for the regular order of business; all this is irregular.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is the motion to adjourn.

Mr. KASSON. It is now after twelve o'clock. If the motion to adjourn should be now carried, could the Speaker again call the House to order until twelve o'clock to-morrow, Friday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. KASSON. As it is now after twelve o'clock——

The SPEAKER. If the House should now adjourn it would have to adjourn to twelve o'clock on the next calendar day.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Does not the ruling of the Chair that this is a continuous legislative day put us out of the benefit of the clergy? That is, can we have prayers to-day?

The SPEAKER. It is not a new legislative day, though a new calendar day.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And without the benefit of the clergy.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and there were—yeas 70, nays 144, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York, said: On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CROOKE. If he were present he would vote in the negative, and I would vote in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next; and on this motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KELLOGG. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL and Mr. KELLOGG were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 44, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] by striking out Friday and inserting Saturday.

The question having been taken on the amendment of Mr. ELDREDGE—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The "ayes" appear to prevail.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HURLBUT and Mr. ELDREDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 47, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. ELDREDGE; and there were—yeas 65, nays 128, not voting 96; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Atkins, Bell, Berry, Blount, Bowen, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. Mr. SPEER. As a matter of fact the Chair must acknowledge that this is Thursday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That no doubt is true, but it is the legislative day of Wednesday.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ALBRIGHT and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

So the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Did a quorum vote upon the last call of the roll?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum did not vote.

Mr. SPEER, (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) I now move that the House adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were 38 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not now in order. The last vote showed no quorum voting, and no motion is now in order except the motion to adjourn, which is now pending.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. I desire to ask a question for information. Would it not be better for this House to adjourn now and get some rest, and then come back prepared to attend to the regular business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that that inquiry is in the nature of debate; and the motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. BECK. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] by striking out Friday and inserting Saturday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question has already been taken on striking out Friday and inserting Saturday, and that motion has been negatived. So the amendment of Mr. CLYMER to the motion of Mr. ARCHER was not agreed to.

During the vote,

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, stated that he was paired with his colleague, Mr. HARRIS, from four o'clock this afternoon till nine o'clock this evening.

The vote was then announced, as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ARCHER] that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 48, nays 114, not voting 127, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Beck, Bell, Bland, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Durham, Finck, John T. So the motion that the House adjourn over till Friday was not agreed to.

During the vote,

Mr. ROBBINS said: Mr. Speaker, I am paired with Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, from two o'clock till ten o'clock to-night, and after that I shall resume voting. He would vote in the negative, while I would vote in the affirmative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. RANDALL that the House adjourn; on which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 86, not voting 150; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arthur, Ashe, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Atkins, Averill, Banning, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Berry, Burchard, Burleigh, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Carpenter, Cessna, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Stephen A. Thomas, Thornburgh, Tremain, Tyner, Waddell, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Wheeler, Whitehead, Whiteley, Charles W. Willard, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, and Woodworth—150.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the vote,

Mr. MERRIAM stated that he was paired with Mr. SCHELL (who would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative) till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BECK. Is there a quorum on the last vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. PARSONS in the chair.) No quorum voted.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It is not necessary to have a quorum on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. You cannot make that motion.

Mr. ELDREDGE. That is the only motion that can be put.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only motion is a motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Or a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has refused to adjourn, and no motion to adjourn is now in order, no business having intervened.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The motion that there be a call of the House is business.

Mr. BECK. Is not a motion for a call of the House business?

Mr. ELDREDGE. This ruling of the Chair is in exact contradiction to the ruling of the Presiding Officer of last evening—or early this morning—I do not know which it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the rule to be well settled that when the House moves to adjourn, and finds itself without a quorum, and a call of the House is moved, no other business is in order except if the House orders a call of the House to proceed with it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The Presiding Officer last evening decided exactly the contrary on this very question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only question before the House is the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. ELDREDGE demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. BECK demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BECK, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 44.

So (more than one-fifth of those present having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 74, nays 69, not voting 146; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Biery, Bradley, Bundy, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Clements, Coburn, Conger, Darrall, Dawes, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Fort, Foster, Gooch, Gunckel, Hagans, Eugene Hale, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hodges, Houghton, Howe, Hunter, Hyde, Lawrence, Loughridge, Lowe, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, MacDougall, McKee, McNulta, Negley, O'Neill, Orth, Packard, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pendleton, Pierce, James H. Platt, jr., Poland, Pratt, Rapier, Ellis H. Roberts, Ross, Sheats, Sheldon, John Q. Smith, Sprague, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tyner, Jasper D. Ward, White, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, John M. S. Williams, and Woodworth—74.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Arther, Ashe, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Buffinton, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, DeWitt, Durham, Eldredge, Finck, Giddings, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hereford, Holman, Hoskins, Kellogg, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Lowndes, Luttrell, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, Read, Milton Sayler, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloss, J. Ambler Smith, Speer, Stanard, Standiford, St. John, Stone, Taylor, Thompson, Vance, Wells, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, William B. Williams, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, James Wilson, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—69.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albright, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Bass, Begole, Berry, Burchard, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cessna, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Corwin, Cotton, Creamer, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Dobbins, Eames, Eden, Farwell, Field, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Glover, Gunter, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, Hays, Hendee, Herndon, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hubbell, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kendall, Killinger, Lamport, Lansing, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Magee, Marshall, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, Merriam, Mitchell, Monroe, Moore, Morey, Myers, Niles, Nunn, Orr, Packer, Hosea W. Parker, Pelham, Perry, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Potter, Purman, Rainey, Randall, Ransier, Ray, Richmond, Robbins, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sessions, Shanks, Sherwood, Sloan, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Southard, Starkweather, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles A. Stevens, Storm, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Tremain, Waddell, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, Whitehead, Whiteley, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, William Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, and Wood—146.

So the motion was agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. ROBBINS. I am not sure that my agreement with Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, to pair with him until half past ten o'clock to-night, would apply to such a vote as this. I wish to keep it in the spirit of it; and for fear it might apply to this vote, I decline to vote.

Mr. BELL. My colleague, Mr. HENRY R. HARRIS, is detained from the House by illness.

Mr. SLOAN. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HENRY R. HARRIS, who has gone home sick. If here he would vote "no" on this motion, and I would vote "ay."

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I am requested to state that my colleague, Mr. SAWYER, is paired with Mr. CREAMER, of New York, until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock.

Upon the announcement of the result as above recorded,

Mr. CLYMER moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is that motion in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the motion is in order.

Mr. CLYMER. I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. CONGER. Then I suppose the next business in order is the call of the roll to ascertain who are the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of the roll having been ordered by a vote of the House, the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Banning, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Begole, Berry, Burchard, Burleigh, Cain, Cessna, Chittenden, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Comingo, Corwin, Cotton, Creamer, Crooke, Curtis, Danford, Duell, Eden, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, Harmer, Henry R. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Hendee, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kendall, Killinger, Lamport, Lansing, Lofland, Lowndes, Lynch, Marshall, Alexander S. McDill, Mitchell, Morey, Nunn, Orr, Packer, Hosea W. Parker, Pelham, Perry, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Potter, Purman, Rapier, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Schell, Isaac W. Scudder, Shanks, Sherwood, Sloan, Small, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Southard, Starkweather, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles A. Stevens, Storm, Swann, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Tremain, Walls, Wheeler, Whiteley, William Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, and Wood.

The SPEAKER. The call of the roll shows the presence of 192 members.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move now that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, having brought so many of our democratic friends here. And now I desire, they being here, to submit to them a proposition. I ask them if there is any hour or any day on which they will agree that this bill shall be taken up for consideration, to be open to amendment and proper discussion? If so and they will name the day, we will agree to it on our side of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. We prefer to take up the appropriation bills; we can take up the civil-rights bill afterward.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Name any time.

Mr. RANDALL. Whenever we have disposed of all the appropriation bills, it will then be time to talk about the civil-rights bill.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. And on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. It is whether the rule does not require that the doors shall be closed under a call of the House after the list of absentees has been called?

The SPEAKER. It does. The Doorkeeper will close the doors of the Hall.

Mr. TYNER. Are excuses for absentees now in order?

Mr. DAWES. Wait until they are called for excuses.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I rise to a question of order. A motion to suspend proceedings under the call was made previous to the order of the Speaker to close the doors of the Hall.

The SPEAKER. That was a neglect which the Chair has since corrected.

Mr. CONGER. Several members went out of the Hall before the Chair ordered the doors to be closed; and they are now continually going out. Would it be in order to have the roll again called?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. DAWES. I think the officer in charge of the door ought to be called to order. I am informed that more members have gone out of the Hall than have come in since the order was made for a call of the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is a fraud on the roll-call.

Mr. CONGER. In view of that fact, I ask that the roll be again called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] immediately upon the announcement by the Chair of the number of members who had responded to their names, moved that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, and the Chair supposed that his motion would meet with no resistance. But the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] called for the yeas and nays on that motion, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] interposed a motion to adjourn, which prevented the House from finishing proceedings under the call.

Mr. DAWES. I understand now that I was mistaken; outsiders are going out of the Hall, not members.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that it was confined principally to persons not entitled to the floor. It is a matter of honor for a member to remain in the Hall after he has answered to his name upon the roll-call.

Mr. LAWRENCE. If the roll should be again called, it will be seen that a great many members have gone out of the Hall.

The SPEAKER. Then they have left thoughtlessly and without consideration, doing that which under the rule they should not do. The Chair does not know that any one has done so to-night.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that the motion to adjourn and the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call were both irregular under the rule, which required the doors to be closed.

The SPEAKER. The intervening period is very brief.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that neither of those motions were in order, and are not now pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] makes the point of order that the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call and also the motion to adjourn were made before the doors were ordered to be closed. The rule is that upon a call of the House being ordered, "the names of the members shall be called over by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; after which the names of the absentees shall again be called over. The doors shall then be shut." The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair having decided that point, I ask now that the names of the absentees be called for excuses.

The SPEAKER. They are not presumed to be here to give excuses.

Mr. CONGER. Then I will move that Mr. WILLIAM A. WHEELER, of New York, be excused, as he is absent on business of the House.

The SPEAKER. He is absent by order of the House, and therefore constructively present. No excuse is needed for him.

Mr. DAWES. Is it not customary for the list of absentees to be called for excuses?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the practice is to call the list of absentees and afterward to issue orders for arrest of the absent members not excused if the proceedings are persisted in.

Mr. DAWES. My recollection is that the list of absentees has been called the second time on these cases for the rendering of excuses. I ask that Mr. PIKE, of New Hampshire, be excused. He left on pressing call of business before this voting commenced. I promised him that I would ask an excuse for him of the House, and I have omitted to do so.

Mr. CONGER. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] should ask for leave of absence for Mr. PIKE, and not for an excuse.

Mr. WILBER. I ask that my colleague, Mr. TREMAIN, be excused on account of poor health.

Mr. FIELD. I object. I suppose Mr. TREMAIN can be here as well as some of us.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move now that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I now renew the motion that the House adjourn, and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SHOEMAKER, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. BUCKNER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were 52 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONGER. I raise the point of order that members are coming into the Hall, although the doors have been ordered to be closed.

Mr. BECK. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order.

Mr. BLAND. I would inquire if the doors of the House are open or shut under the rule?

The SPEAKER. They are shut.

Mr. RANDALL. And I ask attention to be called to the rule prohibiting smoking in the Hall of the House.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think the doors of the Hall are open; I see persons going out.

The SPEAKER. They are open for the exit of persons not entitled to remain on the floor. The question is upon the motion to adjourn, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 103, not voting 133; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Ashe, Atkins, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, DeWitt, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, John T. So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. ROBBINS. The time for my pair with Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, (half past ten o'clock p. m.,) having expired, I feel at liberty to vote on this motion, and I vote "ay."

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. My colleague, Mr. HAVENS, is necessarily absent on account of sickness.

Mr. GUNCKEL. On this question I am paired with Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, who if present would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce that Mr. EAMES, of Rhode Island, is paired with Mr. ARTHUR, of Kentucky; and that Mr. PENDLETON, of Rhode Island, is paired with Mr. SLOSS, of Alabama.

Mr. O'BRIEN. My colleague, Mr. SWANN, is absent from the House this evening because he is slightly unwell.

Mr. STANARD. On this question I am paired with Mr. MORRISON, who if present would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. SLOSS. On this question I am paired with Mr. PENDLETON, of Rhode Island, who if present would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. STRAIT. On this question I am paired with Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, who if present would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] to dispense with further proceedings under the call; upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 108, nays 41, not voting 140; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Archer, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Barrere, Barry, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Buffinton, Caldwell, Carpenter, Amos Clark, jr., John B. So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. All further proceedings under the call are dispensed with, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors of the Hall.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the House now adjourn. I hope that motion will be agreed to; it seems to me it ought to be now.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. ELDREDGE. That motion belongs to our side; you ought not to take it away from us.

Mr. ELDREDGE and others called for the yeas and nays on Mr. BUTLER's motion.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes 14, noes 64; not one-fifth in the affirmative.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. ELDREDGE called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, there being but 18 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of a quorum.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, was then agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. ELDREDGE that the House now adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I hope not.

Mr. SPEER. I thought the gentleman was going with us now.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no; I never thought of such a thing.

Mr. SPEER. You took our motion to adjourn until Saturday.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I did not want you to insist upon occupying all day Monday in the reading of the Journal of to-day's proceedings and roll-calls.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 48, noes 69.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. O'BRIEN called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BIERY and others called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GUNCKEL and Mr. GIDDINGS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were 45 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHANKS. It seems to me that we have been voting on that motion for at least four days.

Mr. HYNES. If the House should vote to adjourn now, would not that adjourn the House till Friday?

The SPEAKER. It would adjourn the House to the next calendar day, which would be Friday.

Mr. HYNES. That being the fact, is it in order to move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next?

The SPEAKER. It may make a little confusion in the Gregorian calendar, but the Chair thinks the motion is admissible under the rule. Whether you consider to-day as Wednesday or Thursday, there are two days to either of which the House can determine to adjourn.

Mr. SPEER. Under the Constitution either House can adjourn for three days without the consent of the other. Does not the ruling of the Chair just made practically annul that provision of the Constitution, by preventing the House from voting on a motion to adjourn for that length of time?

The SPEAKER. It does not. The Chair does not know how, according to parliamentary usage, the proceedings now taking place can be journalized otherwise than of Wednesday, January 27.

Mr. SPEER. If the House should continue in session without adjourning until Monday next at noon, will it be in order during all that time to move that "when the House adjourns it be to meet on Friday next;" that is, Friday, January 29, even after that Friday shall have passed?

The SPEAKER. The motion could be made to adjourn until "the day after to-morrow," or the day after that; and then trust to the Journal to determine what that means.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the yeas and nays on my motion that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next.

Mr. ELDREDGE. And I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet to-morrow; and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. There is no necessity for that motion, for the House can adjourn at once if it chooses to do so.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will say "the day after to-morrow."

The SPEAKER. The House has already determined to do that. The House has voted that when it adjourns to-day it will meet on Saturday next. The Chair thinks there are motions enough pending now to confuse the ordinary mind.

Mr. SPEER. Is it in order to appeal from the decision of the Chair on the point of order the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HYNES] submitted a few minutes since?

The SPEAKER. Not pending these motions, for it would simply be multiplying the number of dilatory motions.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed that when it adjourned to-day it would adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. SPEER. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. HYNES. Is that motion in order pending all these other motions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. FIELD. I hope some one will keep count of all these motions.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPEER. Will the Chair state the order in which the pending motions are to be put?

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon laying on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed that when it adjourned to-day it would adjourn to meet on Saturday next. On that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 95, nays 51, not voting 143; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Barber, Barrere, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cason, Amos Clark, jr., Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Parker, Potter, Read, Robbins, Stone, Storm, Swann, Vance, Waddell, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, and Willie—51.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Arthur, Ashe, Averill, Banning, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Begole, Blount, Burchard, Burleigh, Caldwell, Carpenter, Cessna, Chittenden, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Cox, Creamer, Curtis, Danford, Darrell, Dawes, Donnan, Duell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Farwell, Finck, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Robert S. McDill, Merriam, Mitchell, Morey, Morrison, Myers, Negley, Niles, Nunn, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Packer, Page, Pelham, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Thomas C. Ward, Wells, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, William Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—143.

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to adjourn over until Saturday was laid on the table.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. SLOSS. I am paired with Mr. PENDLETON, of Rhode Island. If he were here he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. STRAIT. I am paired with Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. If he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the House shall now adjourn, when will it meet? What would be the effect of adopting a motion to adjourn now?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Do not make that motion now.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Has not the vote just taken covered that?

The SPEAKER. Why?

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. We have resolved that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Saturday, and the motion to reconsider that vote has been laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. But if the House should now agree to the motion to adjourn until Friday, that, by the usage of the House, would neutralize the vote just taken. The last vote controls. The Chair would be compelled to adjourn the House to the day named by the last action of the House.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 48, nays 98, not voting 143; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Atkins, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bright Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Crittendon, Davis, DeWitt, Eldredge, Glover, Gunter, Hancock, John T. Ward, Wells, Wheeler, White, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, William Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—143.

So the motion to adjourn over till Friday was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. STRAIT. On this question, and all others touching adjournment, I am paired with Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, till six o'clock this morning. If he were here, on this motion he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. RANDALL. I paired on all these votes with Mr. GARFIELD, of Ohio. On this motion he would vote in the negative, and I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am requested to state that Mr. EAMES, of Rhode Island, is paired with Mr. ARTHUR, of Kentucky, until half past nine o'clock this morning.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 3823) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876; when the Speaker signed the same.

CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL.

The question recurred upon the motion that the House do now adjourn, upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 45, nays 92, not voting 152; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Atkins, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Crittenden, Davis, DeWitt, Eldredge, Glover, Gunter, Hancock, John T. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Barber, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Begole, Blount, Bowen, Buckner, Burchard, Roderick R. Wilson, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—152.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call the following announcement was made:

Mr. RANDALL. I am paired upon this question with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. ROBBINS. I second that motion.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I demand the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPEER. Is the motion of my colleague from Pennsylvania in order, when the last vote disclosed the fact that no quorum was present?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is too late to raise that question, other business having intervened.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not observe that no quorum voted on the last vote; but a quorum is not necessary on a motion to adjourn, whether it be decided in the affirmative or in the negative.

Mr. SPEER. No, sir; but upon a motion to adjourn to another day it is necessary that there should be a quorum present.

Mr. RANDALL. Well; we will find out when the vote is taken on that question whether there is a quorum.

Mr. SPEER. My point is that when the last vote discloses the fact that no quorum is present the House cannot proceed to business.

The SPEAKER. It can test the question whether there is a quorum present by the vote on the motion of the gentleman's colleague.

Mr. HYNES. I rise to a question of order. The roll-call just taken has developed the absence of a quorum. Nothing is in order but a motion to adjourn, or for a call of the House. We have just voted on a motion to adjourn, and therefore it cannot now be repeated. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order; you can never reconsider a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HYNES. No, sir; but the House can reconsider the vote by which the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order.

Mr. HYNES. Then I do not think anything is in order but a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. Yes; a motion that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday next is in order.

Mr. CONGER. Would it not be in order to take up the original motion to reconsider the vote by which the civil-rights bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. ELDREDGE. O, no; that will not do; do not let the public business suffer.

Mr. HYNES. When the absence of a quorum is disclosed, the minority of the House present can only adjourn from day to day. They cannot adjourn till Friday.

The SPEAKER. It depends upon whether a quorum would vote upon the motion of adjourning till Friday, and that can only be determined by taking the vote upon that question.

Mr. HYNES. But the proposition cannot be entertained under the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. A quorum did not vote on the last vote taken, it is true; non constat that a quorum may not vote upon the next motion.

Mr. ROBBINS. We will have a quorum next time.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not needed to adjourn or refuse to adjourn, and it cannot be determined whether a quorum will vote on the next question until the vote is taken.

Tellers were ordered on ordering the yeas and nays; and Mr. FIELD and Mr. SPEER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported 35 in the affirmative; more than one-fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 38, nays 90, not voting 161; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Atkins, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bright, Bromberg, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Cook, Crittenden, Davis, DeWitt, Eldredge, Giddings, Gunter, Hatcher, Hereford, Herndon, Leach, Magee, Milliken, Mills, Neal, Nesmith, Hosea W. NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—161.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. RANDALL said: On this vote I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD. If he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

The SPEAKER. On the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday the ayes are 38 and the noes are 90. No quorum has voted.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. TYNER. And pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MAYNARD. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 34.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 94, not voting 142; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atkins, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Crittenden, Davis, DeWitt, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hancock, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Willard, Charles G. Williams, William Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—142.

So the motion was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, said: I am paired with Mr. SCOFIELD, of Pennsylvania. If he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SHANKS. I wish to offer a preamble to the bill, if in order.

Mr. SPEER. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FIELD. I hope it will be read.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let it be read for information.

Mr. SPEER. I object, because it is in the Choctaw language.

Mr. STORM. The Chair decided last night that the gentleman from Indiana could not read. What is the use of his trying?

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] that there be a call of the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. Did the last vote disclose the presence of a quorum?

The SPEAKER. It did.

Mr. MAYNARD. I withdraw my motion for a call of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Friday; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHANKS. Before that I ask to have this preamble read, and I hope gentlemen will not object to the reading.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to a question of order. Is not that motion now before the House regularly? If my memory is correct it is. This identical question was voted upon by the House, and the House discovered itself without a quorum, and of course that vote was ineffective. Is it not in order to retake the vote now, it being demonstrated that there is a quorum in the House?

The SPEAKER. A quorum is now present, but there is nothing to prevent the House from taking a vote upon that question now or to have a call of the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. Well, I have withdrawn my motion for a call of the House, and I suppose that the regular order is to take a vote again upon the motion on which no quorum was disclosed.

The SPEAKER. Whatever motion is before the House ought to have certification by a majority.

Mr. MAYNARD. My point of order, if I make myself understood, is this: the gentleman from Pennsylvania moved that the House adjourn to meet on Friday next——

Mr. ELDREDGE. O, no; he did not make any such motion. That is an impossible motion.

Mr. MAYNARD. He moved that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday next, and my point of order is, that that question is now before the House; for when the House divided upon that question before, it found itself without a quorum; and unless a motion for a call of the House be interposed, the vote must be retaken on it.

Mr. CONGER. The question of a quorum was not raised on that vote, and another motion was made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not quite apprehend the point made by the gentleman from Tennessee. Is the gentleman's point that the vote upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania must be certified on the previous motion without a new motion?

Mr. MAYNARD. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Well, it is quite immaterial as to how it shall be certified, whether upon the former motion or upon the present one.

Mr. MAYNARD. The point is that if this new motion is admitted, then any other might be made; and I submit that before we pass from the previous motion, which was an independent substantive proposition which we were dividing on, we must carry it through to a result by having a decisive vote upon it by a quorum of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to have it; there is only one way in which it can be done, by calling the yeas and nays.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I would inquire if a quorum voted upon the last vote?

The SPEAKER. On the last vote there was a quorum.

Mr. SMALL. If the House agrees to adjourn till Friday, when will that be?

Mr. FORT. I submit that it is Friday now.

The SPEAKER. Friday has become Wednesday.

Mr. ROBBINS. This is the day before yesterday then.

Mr. CONGER. I raise the point of order that determining the day to which the House shall adjourn is other business, and therefore out of order.

Mr. MAYNARD. My point will be made by calling for the regular order, if the Speaker will state what it is.

Mr. FORT. I think the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] will settle this whole difficulty.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the civil-rights bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not time for that yet.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope leave will be granted to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] to read the resolution from the democratic platform of 1872.

Mr. ROBBINS. I hope we shall do something for the gentleman from Indiana; he has been very faithful.

Mr. SPEER. I withdraw my objection to the reading of the Choctaw treaty by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Now let it be read.

Mr. RANDALL. I renew it.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays on the pending motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The pendingm otion is that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday.

Mr. CONGER. That motion had not been entertained when I first made my call.

The SPEAKER. It was entertained before the motion to adjourn was made, but the vote disclosed the fact that there was no quorum. Then the only motions in order were either for a call of the House or to adjourn. A motion to adjourn was made and negatived, and the vote disclosed the fact that a quorum was present. Thereupon the gentleman from Tennessee withdrew his motion for a call of the House. The question then recurred upon certifying the vote which was short of a quorum on the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the Chair to say it was immaterial whether that vote was certified.

The SPEAKER. O, no; the Chair said it was immaterial whether it was certified upon the old motion or upon a new motion of the same purport.

Mr. CONGER. Then I misunderstood the Chair. I understood the Chair to say that it was immaterial whether it was certified or not.

Now, if I have the floor, I yield it to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS.]

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order. I object to debate.

Mr. SHANKS. I hope the regular order will not be insisted on. For thirty-six mortal hours I have struggled for the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. SHANKS. I believe the House wants to hear this.

Mr. RANDALL. I object. The gentleman may as well take his seat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] is not in order.

The pending motion is that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Friday.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I rise to a question of order. That is one week from to-day, and the motion cannot be properly made under the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. RANDALL. I will accept the ruling of the Chair on that point.

The SPEAKER. If the motion should prevail, and after that a motion to adjourn should prevail, although this be Wednesday, the House would meet at twelve o'clock to-day.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 27, nays 84, not voting 178; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atkins, Bland, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Crittenden, Davis, DeWitt, Giddings, Gunter, Hatcher, Lamar, Leach, Luttrell, Magee, Milliken, Hosea W. Parker, Potter, Robbins, Speer, Stone, Storm, Vance, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, and Ephraim K. Wilson—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Cannon, Cason, Amos Clark, jr., Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Conger, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Field, Fort, Foster, Gooch, Hagans, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, John W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Hynes, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Maynard, James W. McDill, McKee, McNulta, Monroe, Moore, O'Neill, Packard, Isaac

C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Phillips, Pierce, Poland, Pratt, Rainey, Rapier, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Henry J. Scudder, Sessions, Shanks, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, Smart, Sprague, St. John, Stowell, Thompson, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tyner, Jasper D. Ward, Wilber, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodworth—84.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Beck, Begole, Bell, Berry, Blount, Bowen, Buckner, Burchard, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Carpenter, Cessna, Chittenden, John B. Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, Harmer, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, Herndon, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hunton, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Lofland, Loughridge, Marshall, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McLean, Merriam, Mills, Mitchell, Morey, Morrison, Myers, Neal, Negley, Nesmith, Niblack, Niles, Nunn, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Packer, Page, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Purman, Randall, Ransier, Ray, Read, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Sloan, Sloss, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Southard, Stanard, Standiford, Starkweather, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles A. Stevens, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Todd, Tremain, Waddell, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, William Williams, Willie, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—178.

The SPEAKER. On this motion the yeas are 27, and the noes are 84.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that a quorum?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Would it be in order now to move that the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER. That is the only thing now that is in order, except that there be a call of the House.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Would it be in order to move to take a recess.

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. By unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Anything can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. I ask that, by unanimous consent, we take a recess, that the Hall may be cleaned, and that we may be in a better condition to proceed to business.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Would it be in order for the clerks to commence now to read the Journal? That might facilitate the public business.

The SPEAKER. There is no motion pending.

Mr. MAYNARD. In order to demonstrate the fact whether there is a quorum or not, I will make the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. ELDREDGE. And pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPEER. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will withdraw his motion. Let us have a call of the House. It will be a good thing for members to make them get up early. It is the early bird that catches the worm.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I have no objection to the House going on with business; but if we are not to do business, it seems to me we ought to adjourn. We have been evidently earning our money sitting here, and I hope our services to the country will be appreciated.

Mr. SHANKS. Shall I now offer this preamble?

Mr. LEACH. Yes; I wish to hear it.

Objection was made.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. MAYNARD'S motion, that there be a call of the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 4; not a sufficient number.

Accordingly the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion for a call of the House was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Albert, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Barry, Bass, Begole, Buckner, Burchard, Cain, Carpenter, Cessna, Chittenden, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Corwin, Cotton, Cox, Creamer, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes Dobbins, Duell, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Farwell, Finck, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gunckel, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, Henry R. Harris, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hooper, Hoskins, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Lofland, Loughridge, Marshall, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, McLean, Merriam, Mitchell, Morey, Morrison, Negley, Niblack, Niles, Nunn, Orr, Orth, Packer, Page, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Purman, Ray, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sherwood, Sloan, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Stanard, Standiford, Starkweather, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles A. Stevens, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Todd, Tremain, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Wheeler, White, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, William Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, John D. Young.

The SPEAKER. The roll-call shows the presence of one hundred and fifty-four members. The doorkeepers will now close the doors.

Mr. TYNER. Is it in order now to present excuses for absentees? If so, I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. SAYLER, is detained from the session of the House to-night by the serious illness of his wife, and I move that he be excused.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. TYNER. This is the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. No; the regular order is to go back and vote on the motion upon which the House found itself without a quorum.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to state that Mr. BEGOLE, of Michigan, is absent on account of indisposition.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I desire to state that Mr. FINCK was too sick to remain in the House, and I ask that he be excused.

Mr. COMINGO. My colleague, Mr. WELLS, is sick and unable to attend the session of the House, and I move that he be excused.

Mr. SPEER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BELL. My colleague, Mr. HARRIS, is detained from the House by sickness, and I move that he be excused.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. I desire to state that Mr. HAMILTON left the House in consequence of indisposition, and I trust he will be excused.

Mr. SPEER. I insist on the regular order. There are too many motions piling up. The House should dispose of one before another is entertained. I for one object to any one being excused unless the yeas and nays are called upon it. I want the yeas and nays in each case, although I hope that every gentleman who is sick or has sickness in his family will be excused.

Mr. MAYNARD. I made my motion, not for the purpose of moving upon the absentees or in any way of discommoding gentlemen who were here all last night and are absent in consequence, but for the purpose of securing a quorum; and as it seems to have been demonstrated that a quorum is present, I am not disposed to press the call any further. In order to test the sense of the House, I will move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, and that we proceed to vote upon the question on which no quorum was developed.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is that a debatable question?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope we shall not dispense with the call. We have a right to the presence and advice of these absent gentlemen.

Mr. ELDREDGE. There is a difference among the elect.

Mr. POLAND. If it is in order to move excuses for absentees, I desire to move that my colleague, Mr. WILLARD, be excused on account of the state of his health.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Now let the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] read the first section of the democratic platform of 1872.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is it understood that all these gentlemen have been excused?

The SPEAKER. The adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee will excuse them.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But the House may not agree to that.

The SPEAKER. The motion takes precedence of all others.

The question was taken on Mr. MAYNARD'S motion, and it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. It is now the duty of the Chair to send out warrants for the absentees.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is it not necessary that the names of the absentees be called for excuses before that is done? Non constat that some of the absentees are not absent by leave of the House.

Mr. NESMITH. Non constat has been here all day, and voted on the last vote.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask as a parliamentary question if it is not necessary that the names of the absentees be called for excuses?

The SPEAKER. The usual mode is to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to send for the absentees.

Mr. MAYNARD. I think the roll of absentees is usually called for the purpose of hearing excuses

The SPEAKER. The Chair has never known it to be done.

Mr. SPEER. I would inquire whether the rules do not require that the debates in this House shall be conducted in the English language? An expression was used by the gentleman from Tennessee which was not understood on this side of the House.

Mr. ELDREDGE. What was that?

Mr. SPEER. Non constat.

Mr. ELDREDGE. He is not a member of the House.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to move that my colleague, Mr. CHARLES W. WILLARD, be excused on account of the state of his health. Every one knows that he is in feeble health, and that he was not able to stay here to-night.

Mr. SPEER. I hope the motion to excuse Mr. WILLARD will prevail.

Mr. SENER. Does the gentleman have a physician's certificate as to the state of his colleague's health?

Mr. CLEMENTS. It would be a good idea to excuse the gentleman. When here he objects to everything.

Mr. BECK. I want the yeas and nays on that.

The SPEAKER. The mode under the call, gentlemen will observe, is that when the House has got through the call and has refused to dismiss proceedings under it the proceeding then becomes an executive one which the Sergeant-at-Arms has to enforce. Of course if the yeas and nays were to be taken on every motion that a gentleman be excused it would be impossible to get to the end of the proceeding. The duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms is to take the list of absentees and peremptorily bring them before the House.

Mr. STORM. The practice has been first to make excuses for gentlemen who are absent, and warrants are not made out for those who are excused by the House.

Mr. FIELD. I move that my colleague, Mr. BEGOLE, be excused. He was present during last night's session and was compelled to leave on account of the state of his health.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is the motion of the gentleman from Vermont to excuse his colleague, Mr. WILLARD.

Mr. BECK. And on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPEER. Let us have a division.

Mr. POLAND. I do not make this motion from any other idea than that Mr. WILLARD is unable to be here at this time of the night.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. WILLARD came to me this evening and said, "I do not know how I can stand here any longer." I think he ought to be excused.

Mr. SPEER. He ought to be excused. There is no doubt that he is in delicate health.

Mr. RANDALL. He is no more in delicate health than I am.

The motion to excuse Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, was agreed to—ayes 61, noes 17.

Mr. FIELD. I repeat my motion that Mr. BEGOLE be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BELL. I move that my colleagues, Mr. STEPHENS and Mr. HARRIS, be excused on account of indisposition. Mr. HARRIS left the House yesterday afternoon extremely unwell.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I ask that my colleague, Mr. LAMPORT, be excused.

There was no objection, and Mr. LAMPORT was excused.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that Mr. FINCK, of Ohio, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. I move that my colleague, Mr. WARD, be excused on account of indisposition.

There was no objection, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHANKS. I move that my colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, be excused on account of indisposition.

Objection was made.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. HOOPER, was here until twelve o'clock. He then came to me, and also spoke to the Speaker, and said he could not stay any longer.

There was no objection, and Mr. HOOPER was excused.

Mr. STORM. I move that Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOWNDES. I ask that my colleague, Mr. ALBERT, be excused on account of indisposition.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. I move that my colleague, Mr. SCHELL, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. I move that my colleague, Mr. WOOD, be excused on account of pressing engagements which are known to the House.

Objection was made.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to—ayes 58, noes 17.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I move to excuse every absentee.

Mr. McDILL, of Iowa. I second the motion. When so many are being excused, all ought to be.

Mr. MAYNARD. Would not that be tantamount to dispensing with further proceedings under the call?

The SPEAKER. It would amount to about the same thing.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, it was not agreed to.

Mr. HERNDON. I move that Mr. SWANN, of Maryland, be excused. He is in very weak health.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Mr. SWANN stated to me, as he went out of the House, that he was completely worn out and that he was sick besides.

The question being taken on excusing Mr. SWANN, there were ayes 62, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILBER. I move that my colleague, Mr. TREMAIN, be excused on account of ill health.

Mr. LAWSON. Mr. TREMAIN is paired with Mr. COX.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That does not excuse him. These pairs are the reason why we have not a quorum.

The motion to excuse Mr. TREMAIN was agreed to.

Mr. LAWSON. I move that my colleague, Mr. PERRY, be excused on account of his age.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. My colleague, Mr. ASHE, is a gentleman somewhat advanced in years. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. KNAPP, of Illinois, left the House very ill. I move that he be excused.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SMALL. My colleague, Mr. PIKE, is necessarily at home in New Hampshire. I move that he be excused.

Mr. SPEER Is he absent by leave of the House?

Mr. STORM. I object.

The motion to excuse Mr. PIKE was not agreed to.

Mr. HAYS. I move that Mr. WHITE, of Alabama, be excused on account of indisposition.

Mr. CALDWELL. I object. He told me this evening that he never tired.

The question being taken on the motion to excuse Mr. WHITE, there were—ayes 56, noes 27.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUNDY. I ask that my colleague, Mr. DANFORD, be excused. He is very sick.

The SPEAKER. Mr. DANFORD is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I move that my colleague, Mr. SAYLER, be excused. He left the House late last evening very much broken down.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I move that Mr. CORWIN be excused on account of ill health.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. There is another gentleman here, a member of the House, who was a contemporary of Mr. WHITE, of Alabama, as a member of the House many years ago—Mr. CURTIS, of Pennsylvania. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE. I move that my colleague, Mr. CESSNA, be excused. He is quite worn out by his service here.

Mr. SPEER. I heard Mr. CESSNA say that he would not leave the House unless he got a pair. I think he would enjoy being here now very much.

The motion to excuse Mr. CESSNA was agreed to.

Mr. FORT. I move that Mr. CLAYTON, of California, be excused. I know that he is unwell.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. TODD, be excused.

Objection was made.

Mr. HAZELTON, of New Jersey. I move that my colleague, Mr. DOBBINS, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. STEVENS, arrived here on Wednesday night, and was sworn in and remained here all night after traveling the night before and has not been able to continue his attendance. I move that he be excused.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. STEVENS said last night that he enjoyed being here very much. I hope that enjoyment will be continued to him.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HERNDON. I move that my colleague, Mr. McLEAN, be excused, as he is in a very feeble condition.

The question was taken, and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I move that my colleague, Mr. YOUNG, be excused on account of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHANKS. I move that my colleague, Mr. WILSON, be excused.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SPEER. I have just learned that Mr. TODD left the House to-night quite unwell. I move therefore that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILBER. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MACDOUGALL, be excused. He only got back to the city to-day, having been necessarily absent from it.

The SPEAKER. He is already excused.

Mr. AVERILL. I move that my colleague, Mr. DUNNELL, be excused. I do not ask this on the ground of old age, but he has been here to-night and I know that he is indisposed, and I hope he will be excused.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LAWSON. I move that my colleague, Mr. BASS, be excused. He has a very sore throat and his wife is quite ill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that my colleague, Mr. SCOFIELD, be excused.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I desire to renew the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] as this seems to be a very sick Congress, to excuse all the absentees.

Mr. VANCE. Non constat included.

Mr. FIELD. O! we cannot afford that.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COMINGO. I move that Mr. WELLS be excused for reasons I have already stated.

Several MEMBERS. What are those reasons?

Mr. COMINGO. He is sick.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I move that my colleague, Mr. HAVENS, be excused. He was compelled to leave the Hall on account of sickness.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I move that my colleague, Mr. MORRISON, be excused. He is in bad health, and is unable to be here.

Mr. RANDALL. He had to be in Florida the whole of last winter.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NESMITH. I move that Mr. Cox be excused.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I am informed that Mr. Cox's family is sick. He has been here most of the time, but was necessarily called away.

Mr. SPEER. What member of his family?

Mr. CONGER. His child.

Mr. SPEER. He has no children.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move that the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BUCKNER, be excused. I know that he has been sick for several days, and is unable to be here.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to excuse Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana.

Mr. SHANKS. O! I object to that; he is too full of objections for us to be able to afford to excuse him.

Mr. SPEER. He ought to be excused; he is paired with Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, who has been excused this evening.

The question was taken; and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LAWSON. I hope Mr. Cox will be excused. He has paired with Mr. TREMAIN, who has been excused this evening.

Mr. FIELD. Mr. COX told me he felt very well to-day.

Mr. PACKARD. I move that my colleague, Judge ORTH, be excused on account of general indisposition.

Several MEMBERS. To be here?

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Now, if there is no other business, while the Sergeant-at-Arms is preparing the list, I should like to ask leave for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] to make his remarks.

Mr. SPEER. O, no; I move that the gentleman from Indiana be excused.

Mr. AVERILL. I move that Mr. SAWYER be excused, because I know that he went home sick. I make this motion in good faith, and I hope he will be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I offer the customary order in such cases:

Ordered, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to arrest and bring to the bar of the House such members as are absent without the leave of the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move that all the members on the other side of the House be excused, and then we can pass the civil-rights bill.

Mr. BECK. I move that Mr. KNAPP, of Illinois, be excused. He left the House at ten o'clock to-night because he was too ill to remain.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. I move that Mr. HAMILTON be excused. He left the House quite indisposed.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Following the example of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] I move that all the members on the other side of the House be excused, as they are suffering from a very severe attack of civil rights.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to reconsider all the votes taken upon these motions, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITELEY. I move that my colleague, Mr. FREEMAN, be excused. He left the Hall quite sick.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachesetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which Mr. FREEMAN was excused; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I understand that Mr. NUNN, of Tennessee, has received a telegram stating that his family is sick, and has to leave the city. I move that he be excused.

A MEMBER. He was in the Hall to-night.

Mr. THORNBURGH. He expects to leave to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHANKS. I move that Mr. COX be excused for the reason that the democratic party, in their convention in 1872, adopted the following resolution——

Mr. SPEER. I object to debate, except on the Choctaw claim. I withdrew my objection on the ground that the gentleman should read nothing but the Choctaw treaty, and he has violated his contract with me.

Mr. CONGER. Does it need any further motion to enable the Sergeant-at-Arms to perform his duties?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. WHITELEY. I move to excuse my colleague, Mr. SLOAN, on account of general debility.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PELHAM. I move that my colleague, Mr. SHEATS, be excused. He is in the Speaker's room now quite sick.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LAWSON. I move that my colleague, Mr. FREEMAN CLARKE, be excused on account of his age. I think he ought to be excused from attendance at a night session.

Mr. CONGER. I would inquire what was the result of the call as to the number present?

The SPEAKER. The call showed the presence of 154 members.

Mr. CONGER. And is not 146 a quorum?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move that all further proceedings under the call be suspended.

Mr. SPEER. O, no! Let us send for the absentees. We may as well spend the morning in this way as in any other.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Would it be in order to move that the House take a recess until ten o'clock in order to give the Sergeant-at-Arms time to make his report?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Would it be in order to move for a new call of the House, in order to see if any of the sick have been overlooked?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

The motion of Mr. CONGER was not agreed to.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. SPEER. That motion has just been made and lost, and no business has intervened.

Mr. TYNER here took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. CONGER. I ask leave to make another motion. I do it at the suggestion of several gentlemen. There are several more members present than a quorum, and there was an understanding which I heard of myself, on both sides of the House, that persons who were up last night would have an opportunity to rest to-night.

Mr. CLYMER. I was here all last night.

Mr. CONGER. I find that those who were here last night and staid here patiently and performed their duties are ready to excuse those who are absent on this call. I will therefore make this motion, that the remaining absentees under this call be excused.

Several MEMBERS. O, no!

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE, (the Speaker.) I desire to say one word. I have never known an instance, and I do not believe such an instance can be found anywhere, that when upon a call of the House a quorum was found to be present the proceedings under it were continued. The House exercises its power to send for absentees because finding itself without a quorum it is incompetent to do business. But the House with one hundred and fifty-four members present has as full power to do business as it ever could have. You may wake one hundred men and take them out of their beds and bring them here, but when you have done so you will not have a particle more power than you have at this moment.

Mr. CROUNSE. When it is now a question of endurance, and those who are here are suffering all the inconvenience of attending this long session of the House, is it not right that those gentlemen who have gone home to bed should be brought here under the call?

Mr. BLAINE. That would not make the endurance of those who are here a particle less.

Mr. CROUNSE. But as a matter of fair play it is right that the others should be here.

Mr. BLAINE. Whether that be the case or not the records of the House ought to show some reason for sending for the absentees, and the record shows the presence of a quorum when the roll was called.

Mr. CONGER. I submit that it might be better for us all to dispense with proceedings under the call. We who are here now may want the same indulgence next night.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no desire, as one member of the House, to evade any responsibility. But I do want the records of the House to show that the precedents of the House have been followed, and the precedent of the House which is based upon principles of common sense is that if the House on the call of the roll finds itself in possession of a quorum that should be the end of the proceeding.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I desire to make an inquiry. If I understand correctly the rules of the House and the law, it is the duty of every member of the House, unless sickness detains him, to be here in his place; and if two hundred and ninety are present and two absent, the two hundred and ninety would have the absolute right to send for the two absentees.

Mr. BLAINE. If the gentleman got the House of Representatives to enforce that, it would never do anything else.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. There is reason for enforcing it when the House is engaged in a struggle like this.

Mr. BLAINE. Do you change the result one particle by bringing the absentees here?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. We would exercise the right of having the men here who ought to be here. I do not care whether we adjourn now or not, but I do insist that we have a right to have all the members here.

Mr. BURROWS. The reasons for the call are indicated in this statement in the Digest:

The members brought in by him are then severally arraigned by the Speaker and interrogated by him as to what excuses they may have to offer for being absent from the sitting of the House without its leave.

Mr. BLAINE. Let me read from the Digest further on that point:

The order of arrest is not usually made by the House unless a quorum cannot otherwise be obtained; and upon the appearance of a quorum a motion is usually made and carried that "all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with;" and this motion is held to be in order at any period of the proceedings.

Mr. SPEER. That motion when made may be lost.

Mr. BLAINE. Of course, it may be lost. I am not disputing the power of the House to reject the motion, or that the power of the House, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut, can be used by the two hundred and ninety members to bring the two absentees here.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to propose a compromise: That we proceed to consider the special order of to-day, the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. FORT. If in order, I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. SPEER. I rise to a question of order. Does the Chair entertain that motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. TYNER.) The Chair does entertain the motion. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania raise a question of order upon it?

Mr. SPEER. I raise the question of order that that motion is not in order, having been already put and lost, and no motion having intervened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair answers the gentleman's question of order by saying that since the motion was previously put to suspend all further proceedings under this call another motion was made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] to excuse all the absentees who had not already been excused. That motion was acted upon, and therefore the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] is in order.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. AVERILL. Is the question debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a question of order. It is this: That the motion I made has not been decided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not agree with the gentleman from Michigan. The gentleman from Michigan made the motion, and the Chair put it and declared it lost.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a question of order. Are the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call and the motion to excuse all absentees equivalent motions?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They may be substantially. There may be nothing left for the House to do under the call after the motion to excuse all absentees is carried; but it would not dispense with all proceedings under the call.

The Chair rules that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is in order.

Mr. SPEER. May I ask the Chair whether the Journal shows that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] was acted on?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Journal is not yet made up, and the Chair is unable to say what appears on it.

Mr. SPEER. Cannot the journal clerk inform the Chair whether this was entered on the Journal?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I rise to ask a parliamentary question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I wish to put this question: Whether, if no action had been taken by the House and we had waited for the Sergeant-at-Arms for half an hour or any other period of time to appear with the absentees, it would not be in order again to put the same motion to suspend further proceedings under the call, even although no other motion had intervened?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A response to that question is immaterial.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not think it is immaterial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is; because the Chair has already decided that other business has intervened.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not wish any such parliamentary precedents to be established as that we cannot get rid of the proceedings under the call at any time when we see fit to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair does not feel called upon to decide any question not properly before the House.

Mr. BECK. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the rule.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 43.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 70, nays 50, not voting 169; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Cain, Caldwell, Cason, Amos Clark, jr., John B. Williams, William Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—169.

So the House agreed to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. SLOSS said: I am paired with Mr. PENDLETON, of Rhode Island. If he had been present he would have voted on this question as he thought best. I would have voted "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. POLAND. I have remained here for two nights endeavoring to make a struggle for what we considered principle upon our side. It was perfectly well understood yesterday that gentlemen who were not here the night before should be here last night to give those of us who remained here during the whole of the first night an opportunity to have some rest; and not a man of them has been here. The men who were here the first night are the very same men who have been here to-night. I do not consider it my duty to stand this any longer, and I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, and others called for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 40.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 64, nays 86, not voting 139; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask that the yeas and nays be called upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANDALL. Pending that, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday.

A MEMBER. It is Friday now.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It is not Friday. The Speaker has held that over and over again.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us understand what the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] is.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] should withdraw his motion, the question immediately to be voted upon would be on the consideration of the motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANDALL. To reconsider what?

The SPEAKER. The question would be on the gentleman's own proposition raising the question of consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the civil-rights bill was recommitted.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the motion I have just made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] moves that when the House adjourns it adjourn till Friday next.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. What Friday?

The SPEAKER. The Friday next after Wednesday, January 27.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a point of order. If I understand the motion, it means that Friday after the termination of this legislative day; and as this legislative day has not terminated and may never terminate so far as I can see, what Friday will that be?

The SPEAKER. If the House should adjourn——

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not think it is fair to put such conundrums to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not object.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If the motion means any other Friday than this, then it is beyond the constitutional power of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. This is not Friday, but Wednesday.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And if it means to-day, then it would be senseless.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania might have a very direct effect. The House now stands recorded as having voted that when it adjourns it will adjourn to meet on Saturday. If the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania should prevail, it would rescind that; and if the House should thereafter adjourn prior to twelve o'clock m. of this Calendar day, it would meet on the day preceding Saturday.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let me put a case in order to get my point before the Chair. The hour of daily meeting, according to the rules of the House, is twelve o'clock. Suppose this legislative day should not terminate till after twelve o'clock noon to-day, Friday——

Mr. ELDREDGE. This is not Friday.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is Friday by the calendar. In the calendar there is no such designation known as a "legislative day." You cannot call it anything else than Friday, and as we may not adjourn till after twelve o'clock noon, (I do not see any hope of it, nor have I any wish for it while the present posture of affairs continues,) if we do not adjourn till after twelve o'clock, then to what time would the House stand adjourned according to this motion?

The SPEAKER. The whole difficulty which the gentleman presents would apply equally to Saturday when we reach it—the time to which the gentleman's own motion applies.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me, no; because my motion was that we should adjourn to meet next Saturday; and that was next Saturday, whether you call this Friday or Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. So the legislative day of Friday, January 29, is just as much Friday at this moment as next Saturday is Saturday, because the legislative day does not begin till twelve o'clock noon. If after twelve o'clock there should be any difficulty in the matter, it will be time enough then to unravel it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I would like to put a parliamentary inquiry, since that seems to be the order. Can the House be deprived of the right to agree to an adjournment for three days by any sort of legerdemain, legislative or otherwise? Have we not the right under the Constitution to adjourn for any number of days not exceeding three, and can we be deprived of it by any sort of parliamentary tactics? Have we not that right under all circumstances?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We cannot adjourn backward; that is the trouble.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman might adjourn backward, I think; but I could not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We cannot adjourn to a day past.

The SPEAKER. The legislative day of Friday is still future.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Whatever legislative day this may be, Friday or not, we have the right under the Constitution to adjourn for not exceeding three days; and we cannot be deprived of that right under any circumstances. Now, whether or not we can do so by the form of the motion which is proposed, we certainly can adjourn under the Constitution for not exceeding three days.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to put this as a mere conundrum; I am endeavoring to get rid of one of these dilatory motions. Now, the way to test the matter is this: If this is Wednesday, then the gentleman from Pennsylvania might move to adjourn till Thursday—that is yesterday, a day passed—just as well as to Friday. There is the difficulty. We are tied up by a legislative fiction; worse than that, for I am willing the fiction shall exist until it necessarily passes out of existence. Now, the day called by legislative fiction Wednesday has passed over into Friday; and therefore we cannot adjourn to Friday.

The SPEAKER. We have not yet reached the legislative day of Friday.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts is this: If this be Friday, then we have a right to make a motion that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Monday.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will discuss that motion when it is made.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Whether it be Wednesday or Friday, we have a right to an adjournment for three days; and we cannot be deprived of that constitutional right by a "legislative fiction," as the gentleman styles it, nor by any legislative tactics or legerdemain. Whichever way you look at the question, this constitutional right remains. If this be Wednesday in contemplation of law or parliamentary usage, then we have a right to adjourn until Saturday; if it be Thursday, then we have a right to adjourn for three days from Thursday; and if it be Friday, we have a right to adjourn until three days after Friday. Whatever you may call it—legislative day or calendar day—we have the constitutional right to adjourn for three days; of that we cannot be deprived under any circumstances.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. My proposition (and I will not trouble the Chair and the House on this question much longer) is this: The rule under which the House is required to meet at twelve o'clock on Friday cannot be repealed in this way. We are now in session on the day known in the calendar (which is part of the common law) as Friday; and the rule says that the House shall meet at twelve o'clock on that day. Now, how can we by simply staying here repeal that rule?

The SPEAKER. According to the rule, there must be an adjournment before the current legislative day can terminate; and an adjournment does not take place by reason of the arrival of the time for the regular daily meeting of the House. That is the rule. The Chair thinks that it would be a very great improvement if the rules were changed so that at the end of each calendar day, or rather upon the arrival of the hour of meeting on each calendar day, the House, if in session, should be declared adjourned and should then immediately be called to order again, to begin a new daily session. This would at all times insure the correct date in the proceedings of the House. But the rule has been otherwise; and it is the duty of the Chair to administer the rule as he finds it, not as he thinks it ought to be.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It seems to me that the object of the existing rule is perfectly apparent. It is to continue legislative action which, if an adjournment should take place, might fall; so that business pending in the House may not be suspended or terminated by the arrival of a subsequent calendar day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will himself observe how the construction of the rule as stated by the Chair might be very important for maintaining in its place the very measure which the gentleman from Massachusetts is seeking to have passed. For example, suppose the legislative day of Friday had been assigned to the consideration of some special order to the exclusion of all other orders. Then, if an adjournment were effected, the position which the gentleman's measure now holds would be lost; but by a continuous session it holds its place. Thus it may often be very important for the priority of a certain order that it should run in this way.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But this measure would stand as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. That does not matter. If the rules had been suspended to declare that a certain other measure should be taken up on Friday at one o'clock to the exclusion of all other orders, it would exclude this bill along with everything else.

Mr. LAWRENCE. But, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BECK. I call for the regular order. This whole thing has been flung in for "buncombe," and is kept up for that. We had better work it out.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It seems to me the legislative day may continue for the puuposes stated by the Speaker; but——

Mr. BECK. I call for the regular order.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I make the point of order that it is not in order now to move to adjourn to meet on Friday, because Friday has arrived. It is now twenty-five minutes after five o'clock on Friday morning, January 29, 1875. I have a realizing sense of that. I have been constant in my attendance here since these proceedings commenced on Wednesday, without sleep, and only absent for meals.

The SPEAKER. The legislative day of Friday, however, does not begin till twelve o'clock m.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is true; but if the claim which is made here is good, then the right to make such a motion would be the same after twelve o'clock m. on Friday. Therefore I submit that the "legislative day" cannot continue for all purposes. The hour and the day of adjournment are always noted in the RECORD, and this will show that the "legislative day" can only exist for certain purposes, but not for all. Wherever the actual calendar day is material it must be regarded according to the fact——

The SPEAKER. The Chair at half past five a. m. will not rule upon what may take place in the afternoon of the same day. It will be time enough to rule on that when the question arises.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If the position of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] is correct, he is not speaking upon the subject now under consideration, but he is speaking upon some subject that will come up on the calendar day of Friday.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am not speaking at all now.

Several MEMBERS. O yes, you are!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] is addressing the House.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. RANDALL, that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday next; and there were—yeas 17, nays 79, not voting 193; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Bell, Berry, Bright, Comingo, Crossland, Gunter, Hatcher, Hereford, Lamar, Milliken, Mills, Read, Speer, Vance, Waddell, and Wolfe—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Barber, Barrere, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cason, Amos Clark, jr., Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. During the roll-call,

Mr. MYERS said: On this question I would vote "no" were I not paired with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAMISON.]

The vote was then announced as above stated, no quorum voting.

Mr. LEACH. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. TYNER in the chair.) The gentleman is right; there was no quorum voting.

Mr. SENER. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is not necessary that a call of the House should be ordered. That comes of course, by the order of the Speaker, if I understand it.

Mr. SPEER. A motion to adjourn would be in order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But if no motion to adjourn is made the Chair must order the roll to be called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will order the roll to be called.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Albert, Arthur, Ashe, Averill, Banning, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Begole, Buckner, Burchard, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Chittenden, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Corwin, Cotton, Cox, Crooke, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, DeWitt, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Eden, Farwell, Finck, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gunckel, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, Henry R. Harris, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Lofland, Loughridge, Marshall, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, Merriam, Mitchell, Monroe, Morey, Negley, Niblack, Niles, Nunn, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Purman, Ray, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Sherwood, Sloan, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, William A. Smith, Sprague, Stanard, Standiford, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles A. Stevens, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Todd, Tremain, Waldron, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Should not the doors now be closed?

Mr. ASHE. I desire to state that my name appears among the absentees, but that I was present and failed to answer to my name, as I was not attending to the roll-call at the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's name appears among the absentees. The roll-call develops the presence of 149 gentlemen, and the Chair directs that the doors of the Hall be shut.

The doors of the Hall were accordingly closed.

Mr. SPEER. There is a quorum present, I believe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes, 149 is a quorum; but it is for the House to determine what further action they will take under the call.

Mr. SPEER. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no; this is the third call we have had. We have a call of the House and get in just a quorum, and the moment the doors are opened they all go away and we can have no vote.

Mr. SPEER. Not all.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There are just enough left for seed. There are 147 absentees. I have sat up here to do the public business for two nights, answering to my name on every roll-call.

Mr. FORT. And two days.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me; only one day; but I have answered on every roll-call so far as I know, and I am determined for one——

Mr. ELDREDGE. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPEER. What subject is the gentleman from Massachusetts discussing?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am discussing the necessity of sending for members and making them attend to their duties.

Mr. SPEER. You are discussing yourself.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For the information of the House the Chair directs the Clerk to read a passage from Barclay's Digest, to show the House that the Chair has no power in the premises.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am glad that the House is to be shown something at last.

The Clerk read as follows:

Upon calls of the House, the names of the members shall be called over by the Clerk, and the absentees noted. After which the names of the absentees shall again be called over. The doors shall then be shut, and those for whom no excuse or insufficient excuses are made may, by order of those present, if fifteen in number, be taken into custody as they appear, or may be sent for and taken into custody wherever to be found, by special messengers to be appointed for that purpose.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. SPEER, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. SENER. I now move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to bring the absentees to the bar of the House.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

The question was put on ordering the yeas and nays, and 36 members voted therefor.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts was premature in his demand for tellers. He should have waited until the Chair had counted the House to ascertain if the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that the gentleman from Massachusetts was entitled all the time to the most perfect count that could be had.

Mr. ELDREDGE. But the gentleman demanded tellers before the Chair had decided whether the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the demand for tellers was properly made.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ELDREDGE, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported 41 in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 74, nays 58, not voting 157; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Barber, Barrere, Biery, Bradley, Bundy, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Amos Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Coburn, Conger, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Field, Eugene Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, John W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Lawrence, Lewis, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Maynard, McKee, McNulta, Moore, O'Neill, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Phillips, James H. Platt, jr., Pratt, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ross, Henry J. Scudder, Sener, Shanks, Sheats, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Smart, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tyner, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Whiteley, Wilber, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodworth—74.

NAYS—Messrs. Archer, Ashe, Atkins, Beck, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buffinton, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clinton L. Cobb, Comingo, Cook, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Fort, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hereford, Herndon, Hunton, Luttrell, Magee, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Hosea W. Parker, Potter, Randall, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, Southard, Speer, Stone, Thompson, Vance, Waddell, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, George Willard, Willie, and Wolfe—58.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Arthur, Averill, Banning, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Begole, Bell, Buckner, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Chittenden, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Stephen A. Cobb, Corwin, Cotton, Cox, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, DeWitt, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Eden, Farwell, Finck, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, Harmer, Henry R. Harris, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Holman, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hyde, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Lawson, Leach, Lofland, Loughridge, Marshall, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Merriam, Mitchell, Monroe, Morey, Myers, Negley, Niblack, Niles, Nunn, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Pierce, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Purman, Ray, Read, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Sheldon, Sherwood, Sloan, Sloss, Small, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, William A. Smith, Stanard, Standiford, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles A. Stevens, Storm, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Todd, Tremain, Waldron, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—157.

So the motion was agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following proceedings took place:

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of order. I object to the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. FINCK, voting; because when the doors were closed that gentleman was not in the Hall.

A MEMBER. How did he get in.

Mr. FINCK. The Sergeant-at-Arms allowed me to come in. I was excused on a former call.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. TYNER.) The name of Mr. FINCK is on the roll-call as having voted. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of order on the gentleman's vote?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir; I desire to raise the point of order. There is no difference as to the fact. I was going out under leave, and the gentleman from Ohio was coming in after the doors were closed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts raises the point of order that the gentleman from Ohio was not present when the roll was called for absentees.

Mr. FINCK. That is true. I was not present at the call of the absentees, but I was excused during the night. I was here before the roll was called on the present vote.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman was excused under the other call, but that does not give him the right to vote here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is under the impression that the excuse of the gentleman on the other call does not entitle him to vote now, when the doors are closed.

Mr. CLYMER. I am informed that two other gentlemen, Mr. SPRAGUE, of Ohio, and Mr. SNYDER, of Arkansas, who have voted on this question were not in the House when the doors were closed. I appeal to these gentlemen to know if I have been correctly informed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire to raise the point of order against those two gentlemen voting?

Mr. CLYMER. If that is to be the rule, I desire to have it applied all around.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am willing to waive the point of order.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I renew the point of order against the vote of the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. FINCK, being received.

Mr. SNYDER. I desire to say that I was present when the roll was called for absentees and answered to my name, which the record will show.

Mr. CLYMER. I have no knowledge of the fact myself. I was merely told that the gentleman was absent.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to say that I have not been out of the Hall this morning or during the whole of last night. My name appears on the roll as being present when the absentees were called.

Mr. CLYMER. I was informed by gentlemen all around me that the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Arkansas were not present at the call of the roll for absentees. I believe now that my information is incorrect, and regret that I have done them an injustice, and cheerfully make this retraction and withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that Mr. FINCK was one of the absentees when the roll was called.

Mr. FINCK. That there may be no question about it, I withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINCK] being allowed to withdraw his vote?

Mr. POTTER. I desire to say just a single word about that. The gentleman from Ohio was excused by order of the House for the night. He returned here and was within the bar when the roll was last called. I am inclined to think he had a right to vote.

Mr. FINCK. I prefer to have my vote withdrawn, that there may be no question about it.

There was no objection; and Mr. FINCK's vote was withdrawn.

Mr. CLYMER. I change my vote from "no" to "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CLYMER. I rise to make a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Sergeant-at-Arms has been directed to bring absentees to the bar.

Mr. SENER. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. CLYMER. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 38.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I rise to a question of order. There was not a quorum on the last vote.

Mr. SPEER. A quorum was not required.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin that less than a quorum is competent to take charge of all proceedings in connection with a call of the House.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is that motion in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a privileged motion.

Mr. LUTTRELL. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. ELDREDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 33, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SENER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SENER. Is it allowable for the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Doorkeeper, or any other officer of the House during a call to admit to the floor without the permission of the House any member who did not answer to his name on the roll-call?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will answer the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SENER] by saying that the Chair directed the doors to be shut, and he has not since ordered them to be opened.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ELDREDGE that the House adjourn, there were—yeas 45, nays 82, not voting 162; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Ashe, Atkins, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Glover, Gunter, Hancock, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Herndon, Hunton, Luttrell, Magee, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Potter, Speer, Stone, Vance, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Willie, and Wolfe—45.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Barrere, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Amos Clark, jr., Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Field, Fort, Gooch, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, John W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Lawrence, Lewis, Lowndes, Lynch, Maynard, McKee, McNulta, Moore, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Phillips, Pierce, Pratt, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ellis H. Roberts, Ross, Henry J. Scudder, Sener, Shanks, Sheats, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, Smart, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Thompson, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tyner, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Whiteley, Wilber, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodworth—82.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Arthur, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Begole, Blount, Bowen, Buckner, Burchard, Roderick R. Butler, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Chittenden, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Stephen A. Cobb, Corwin, Cotton, Cox, Creamer, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, DeWitt, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Eden, Farwell, Finck, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Giddings, Gunckel, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, Henry R. Harris, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Lawson, Leach, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Marshall, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Merriam, Mitchell, Monroe, Morey, Myers, Negley, Niblack, Niles, Nunn, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Purman, Randall, Ray, Read, Richmond, Robbins, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Sheldon, Sherwood, Sloan, Sloss, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, William A. Smith, Southard, Stanard, Standiford, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles A. Stevens, Storm, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Todd, Tremain, Waddell, Waldron, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—162.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

At the conclusion of the roll-call, and before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. E. R. HOAR said: I wish to inquire of the Chair whether the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BANNING, is recorded as voting upon this roll-call?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that Mr. BANNING is recorded as voting in the affirmative.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Mr. BANNING is not present in the Hall and has not been during this call of the roll.

Mr. POTTER. His name ought to be stricken off.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. He is not in the House. There is no dispute about that fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. According to the understanding of the Chair, no one questions the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR;] and Mr. BANNING's name will be struck out.

A MEMBER. He voted from the gallery.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SENER] to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House ordered the absentees to be brought to the bar. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 78, nays 41, not voting 170; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Amos Clark, jr., Clements, Coburn, Conger, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Field, Fort, Gooch, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, John W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Lawrence, Lewis, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Maynard, McKee, McNulta, Moore, O'Neill, Isaac C. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tyner, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Whitehouse, Whiteley, Wilber, George Willard, William Williams, James Wilson, and Woodworth—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Comingo, Cook, Crittenden, Davis, Durham, Glover, Hancock, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Herndon, Hunton, Luttrell, Magee, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, O'Brien, Potter, Stone, Vance, Wells, Whitehead, Whitthorne, Willie, and Wolfe—41.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Archer, Arthur, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barnum, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Beck, Begole, Buckner, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Stephen A. Cobb, Corwin, Cotton, Cox,

Creamer, Crossland, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, DeWitt, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Eden, Eldredge, Farwell, Finck, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Giddings, Gunckel, Gunter, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, Henry R. Harris, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Lawson, Leach, Lofland, Loughridge, Marshall, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Merriam, Mitchell, Monroe, Morey, Myers, Negley, Niblack, Niles, Nunn, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Purman, Randall, Ray, Read, Richmond, Robbins, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Sheldon, Sherwood, Sloan, Sloss, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, William A. Smith, Southard, Speer, Stanard, Standiford, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles A. Stevens, Storm, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thompson, Todd, Tremain, Waddell, Waldron, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William B. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—170.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask that the Sergeant-at-Arms be now directed by the Chair to execute the order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have that attended to.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Speaker, would it not be well to consider now the excuses of absentees before the warrant is made out and placed in the hands of the Sergeant-at-Arms?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and others. O, no.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that it would be in order to consider the excuses of absent members now.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Before they get here?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that under the rule——

Mr. CONGER. If the Chair pleases, I would like to make a single remark.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. I think our Speaker decided last night that that would be the rule, but that as it was in the middle of the night, and much inconvenience would arise in bringing members, he would adopt that construction; but otherwise the rule would be to have them arrested and brought here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the custom has been uniform to receive the excuses of absentees, even without their presence; otherwise the House might frequently send for gentlemen who were very sick.

Mr. SPEER. There are members of the House who are absent by order of the House—for instance, the committee at New Orleans—and others are absent by leave of the House at home; and if this resolution were adopted, the Sergeant-at-Arms would have to pursue them to New Orleans and elsewhere and to their homes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The solution of that difficulty is easy. It is the duty of the Clerk in making up the roll to note all gentlemen who are absent by order of the House, and only to make out warrants for the arrest of those who are not absent by leave of the House, as shown by the record.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Allow me to make a single suggestion. The reason for allowing excuses for members was in order that the fine in olden times might not be collected. The object of this proceeding now is to have these members present so as to form a quorum, so that the question of excusing them ought never to take precedence of their presence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read again a clause from Barclay's Digest in relation to this subject, and he asks the careful attention of the House to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Upon calls of the House, the names of the members shall be called over (alphabetically) by the Clerk, and the absentees noted. After which the names of the absentees shall again be called over. The doors shall then be shut, and those for whom no excuse or insufficient excuses are made may, by order of those present, if fifteen in number, be taken into custody as they appear, or may be sent for and taken into custody wherever to be found, by special messengers to be appointed for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts will see by the language of the Digest that it is entirely competent to receive excuses of absentees before their arrest.

Mr. SPEER. That is the very point I made.

Mr. SENER. But in this case the arrest has already been ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; the House simply ordered in general terms the arrest of all absentees. Now it is competent for the House to determine whether these gentlemen are all absent in a sense that justifies their arrest. The Chair is clear in this ruling.

Mr. BELL. I move that the Hon. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS be excused on account of feeble health.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BELL. I also move that my colleague, Hon. HENRY R. HARRIS, be excused for the same reason. He left the Hall last night to my personal knowledge on account of indisposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I object.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. What is the excuse?

Mr. BELL. Sickness; my colleague is sick.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman reports that his colleague, Mr. HARRIS, is absent by reason of sickness.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BELL, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BUNDY. I move that my colleague, Mr. DANFORD, be excused; he is sick of a fever at Willard's Hotel.

Mr. BRADLEY. I wish to say one word upon that motion in the way of a suggestion. It strikes me that the Sergeant-at-Arms, if he finds any of these gentlemen in a condition of health which renders it impossible for him to bring them before the bar of the House, will report the facts to the House for its action.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair responds to that by saying that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House can exercise no discretion whatever in excusing any absentee. He can only report the fact of the illness of an absentee to the House.

Mr. CONGER. That is just what I had risen to say. It is the idea I wished to express; but more beautifully expressed by the Chair.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I move that my colleage, Mr. LAMPORT, be excused; he is sick.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK. I move that Mr. ASHE, of North Carolina, be excused. He was in his seat at the time his name was called but failed to answer to it and is now on the floor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FIELD. I move that Mr. HODGES, of Arkansas, be excused. He was asleep when his name was called and failed to answer.

Mr. SENER. I object; it is the duty of a member to make his excuse personally if he is present.

Mr. FIELD. But he is still asleep.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. My colleague, Governor WARD, left the House very unwell last evening, and I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. I move that my colleague, Mr. TODD, be excused for the same reason. He went home shortly before midnight in consequence of indisposition.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move that the House excuse those old gentlemen, Mr. SCHELL, Mr. HOOPER——

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. TYNER.) Let the gentleman make his motion with reference to one at a time.

Mr. O'NEILL. Those are not old gentlemen.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move that Mr. SCHELL be excused.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no. Mr. SCHELL can be here just as well as you and I, and he would not thank the gentleman for making that excuse for him. I call for a division.

Mr. LUTTRELL. He has been excused already to-night on the previous call.

The question being taken on the motion to excuse Mr. SCHELL, there were—ayes 36, noes 64.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. McKEE. I rise to a point of order, that the yeas and nays cannot be ordered on this question. It is not in order, and is an unheard of proceeding in any parliamentary body.

Mr. SENER. The Speaker of the House so ruled during the night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks there is no question whatever of the right of any gentleman, under the Constitution, on a question of this sort to ask for the yeas and nays, or of the right to order them if a sufficient number of the members shall vote for it.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to make a remark upon this question.

Mr. CREAMER. I object to argument.

Mr. CONGER. I do not desire to submit an argument, but merely a remark.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Michigan is rising to a question of order, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. CONGER. I have risen on this question as to the order of business and wish to make a remark in regard to it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. I will say in regard to this order of business that I think the members here have not the right to place a member of this House in a false position toward his constituents and the country by claiming for him what he would certainly not claim for himself, that he was unfit to perform his duties here whether he was old or young.

Mr. SHANKS. Male or female.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All that is a question which the House can determine by its vote.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I desire to say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHELL] has been quite sick.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. He has been in the House during a considerable portion of the time that the House has been in continuous session.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I desire to ask the Chair what is the present condition of the proceedings? Is the action of the Sergeant-at-Arms in arresting and bringing the absentees here all suspended by these proceedings; or is the Sergeant-at-Arms acting under the order of the House directing him to arrest the absentees?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will answer the gentleman's question by saying that the warrant has not yet issued.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Then I ask the Chair for the reason why the Sergeant-at-Arms has not acted upon the order of the House directing him to arrest and bring here the members who are outside?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Because the Sergeant at Arms is furnished with a list of names and it requires some time to make out the warrant. And further, the Chair holds that while proceedings are going on in the House with reference to the excusing of gentlemen for absence it is competent to withhold the warrant until the House shall have concluded that business.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Then the result is if the yeas and nays are called upon every excuse that is offered for a member we may never get to the end of the proceeding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is forced to say that in his judgment that is unfortunately the fact.

Mr. WILBER. I rise to ask a parliamentary question.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. CESSNA rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the appeal of the gentleman from Maine from the decision of the Chair, but will listen to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CESSNA.]

Mr. CESSNA. I desire first to know from the Chair if I am in a condition to say a word upon this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman an absentee?

Mr. CESSNA. I was not present when the roll was called for absentees. But with the permission of the Chair I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry. The constitutional provision which directs that a certain number of members shall have the right to have the roll called——

Mr. CREAMER. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is stating a parliamentary question. The Chair will hear him.

Mr. CESSNA. We have demonstrated that there is no House now present. I think if the ruling of the Chair in regard to the ordering of the yeas and nays should be enforced the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] is a very pertinent one. If the roll is to be called on accepting excuses when there is no House present it would become impossible to enforce the order for the attendance of absentees.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I think the Chair will allow me to make a further suggestion upon this point. The occupant of the chair is a distinguished parliamentarian, I admit; but if the rule under which the House is now acting is again read, it does seem to me it will be apparent that after the order of the House directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring the absentees to the bar of the House nothing is in order except to receive excuses.

Mr. CREAMER. I object to debate. The present occupant of the chair is as competent as any man on this floor to rule upon this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will give his decision upon the point. The Clerk will read the rule under which the House is acting.

The Clerk read as follows:

Upon calls of the House, the names of members shall be called over (alphabetically) by the Clerk, and the absentees noted. After which the names of the absentees shall again be called over. The doors shall then be shut, and those for whom no excuse or insufficient excuses are made, may, by order of those present, if fifteen in number, be taken into custody as they appear, or may be sent for and taken into custody wherever to be found, by special messengers to be appointed for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine will observe that the rule, which has just been read at the Clerk's desk, directs that after the doors shall be shut excuses may then be offered. When these excuses are heard it is not for the Chair to determine whether or not they are sufficient. That can be done by the House alone. And the Chair will again call attention to another clause of the rule, which will throw some light upon this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is not in order for the House to take a recess during a call of the House; indeed, no motion, except to adjourn or with reference to the call, is ever entertained during a call.—Barclay's Digest, page 36.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. But, Mr. Speaker, must not all these proceedings in the nature of excuses take place before the House orders the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring in absentees?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I hope the Chair will be allowed to make his decisions without being interrupted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that under this rule, which authorizes any motion with reference to the call to be made and decided during proceedings in a call, a motion as to the excuse of an absentee is a motion having reference to the call.

Mr. PARSONS. But I submit that no excuse can be made after the order has been issued to the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring in absentees.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That is the point. The proposition to excuse members must be made before that order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to a parliamentary point which, in my judgment, covers all these difficulties. Who authorizes men here to offer excuses for those who are absent? What do these men here know about the matter?

Mr. ELDREDGE. One of these gentlemen absent asked me when he went away to make excuse for him.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. How do we know the authority by which any such request is made? Should not each man be allowed to make his own excuse? Now, here is an attempt on the part of some gentlemen to have a man excused because, they say, he is too old to be here. His constituents are the best judges whether he can come into the House at eight o'clock in the morning or not. If not, he ought to be sent home for good. I do not believe he will thank anybody for pleading that he is too old to be here. He is younger than many of the men who are asked to vote to excuse him.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. I submit that this is not the House in any correct parliamentary sense, and it can only entertain motions necessary under a call to secure the attendance of absent members. It has no authority to call the yeas and nays except upon the one main proposition. If the Chair after consideration holds to the decision he has made, I must respectfully appeal from it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois; but the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] as the Chair understands, has taken an appeal from the decision of the Chair on this point, and the Chair will now submit to the House the question, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the House adjourn, and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. POTTER. Will the Chair state upon what point the appeal from his decision is taken?

The SPEAKER. Upon the point that the yeas and nays may be taken upon a motion to excuse an absentee.

Mr. POTTER. Or on any other motion when less than a quorum is present. The uniform practice of the House since I have been here has been to allow the yeas and nays to be taken in such cases.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Here is a case in the Journal of the House that meets this point precisely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the question on the appeal, the gentleman from Wisconsin has moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I raise a question of order. I desire to have read for the information of the House a precedent from the proceedings of the House of Representatives, covering the precise point of this decision.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I demand the regular order, which is to vote upon the motion that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair respectfully requests the gentleman from Wisconsin to withhold his demand for a vote on that motion until this extract from the Journals can be read by the Clerk.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I cheerfully accede to the suggestion of the Chair.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. If there is any precedent on this question I think the House ought to have it; and I believe the case appearing in this volume of the Journals is precisely in point.

Mr. McKEE. And there are plenty more of such precedents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read from the Journal of the House of Representatives of February 25, 1859.

The Clerk read as follows:

The names of all the absentees having been called over for excuses,

On motion of Mr. Stanton,

Ordered, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to arrest and bring to the bar of the House such members as are absent without the leave of the House.

Mr. Moore moved (at seven o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) that the House adjourn; which motion was disagreed to.

Mr. John Sherman moved that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with; which motion was disagreed to.

Mr. Clark B. Cochrane moved (at seven o'clock and thirty-seven minutes p. m.) that the House adjourn; which motion was disagreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House, having in custody Messrs. Abbott, Bliss, Bryan, and John B. Clark.

The said members having been arraigned,

Mr. John B. Clark was excused for non-attendance; and Messrs. Abbott, Bliss, and Bryan were severally excused upon the payment of fees.

Mr. Seward moved, at seven o'clock and forty-eight minutes p. m., that the House adjourn; which motion was disagreed to.

Mr. Winslow moved that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with; which motion was disagreed to.

Mr. SPEER. That has no application whatever to this case.

Mr. McKEE. Let the Clerk read from the previous page.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALBRIGHT] desire this Journal to be further read?

Mr. McKEE. The page preceding that will show that excuses are offered prior to ordering the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring in absentees.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I wish to put an inquiry to the Chair. The House last night excused certain gentlemen. For what length of time does that excuse last?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The decision of the Chair would be that those gentlemen were excused only for the call then pending, not for any subsequent call. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It is right, I think, that the Chair——

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I rise to a point of order. In order that my point may be stated correctly, I desire to say that I do not take an appeal from the decision of the Chair as to the call of the yeas and nays on excusing members, but from the ruling of the Chair, that after the direction to the Sergeant-at-Arms the House can receive excuses from members present before the Sergeant-at-Arms brings in the recusant members.

Mr. ELDREDGE. When the gentleman from Maine gets through with all his little speeches, let us have the regular order of business.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SPEER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Bearing upon the question of adjournment?

Mr. SPEER. Yes, sir. It is that after the yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to excuse the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SCHELL,] pending that the motion to adjourn is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The answer to that is that the roll-call had not commenced, and previous to the commencement of the roll-call the Chair holds that a motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. CESSNA. Before the commencement of the roll-call I desire to ask the House to be excused for delinquency up to this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides that the motion to adjourn is a question of higher privilege than that.

Mr. CESSNA. It is, I know, unless there is unanimous consent.

Mr. BROMBERG. I object, as objection was made in the case of Mr. FINCK, of Ohio.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 42, nays 62; not voting 185; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Ashe, Bell, Berry, Bland, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Comingo, Cook, Crittenden, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Glover, Gunter, Hancock, John T. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—185,

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on the appeal taken by Mr. HALE, of Maine, from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have been asked to reduce my appeal to writing, and have done it; so that it may be seen clearly what my point is in justice to the Chair and myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The appeal will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appeal is taken from the decision of the Chair that after the House has ordered absent members to be taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms excuses of absent members may be considered, on motion of members on the floor, before the return of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Is that in order before the question on the appeal is decided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hold that it is in order. The rule expressly provides for two motions which may be made pending a call of the House; one to adjourn and the other to dispense with further proceedings under the call, and the gentleman from Wisconsin has made the latter motion.

Mr. McKEE. I have a higher question to present—a question of the highest privilege. One and a half hours ago this House ordered the arrest by the Sergeant-at-Arms of certain parties. Has the warrant issued?

Mr. ELDREDGE. What has that to do with it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has nothing to do with the pending question.

Mr. SENER. I desire to make this point: that the House, having directed its absent members to be brought to the bar and their excuses there to be offered, and the House having laid on the table the motion to reconsider that vote and no excuses having been offered by such members, this is an equivalent motion to the motion to reconsider, and therefore is not in order until some proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of the highest privilege is the one made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDREDGE,] that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. McKEE. Does the Chair rule that it is a question of higher privilege than the question whether the order of the House has been obeyed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that the highest question of privilege at the present stage of proceeding is the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. McKEE. The Chair does not hold that on that account my motion is out of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may answer the question at another time when it is more pertinent.

Mr. McKEE. Does the Chair rule that it is impertinent to ask whether the orders of the House have been obeyed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By no means.

Mr. McKEE. The Chair said that the question was not pertinent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the Chair did not thereby mean to intimate that it was impertinent in the sense of being insolent.

Mr. McKEE. I know that difference well enough.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. At the distance I sat from the Chair I did not distintly hear what the Chair stated after the reading of the appeal, to the effect that certain things alone could be done. I should like to know what it was that the Chair stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only thing the Chair now decides is that the motion to suspend all further proceedings under this call is a motion of the highest privilege, and that it can only be cut off by one other motion, the motion to adjourn. And the motion to adjourn is not now in order, because no other business has intervened since the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I understood the Speaker to say that certain things were all this body, constituted as it is, could now do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not at all.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I submit the point of order that pending these proceedings the Chair must either peremptorily settle all questions of appeal or have the House to settle them. Now, if the Chair had decided that no appeal could be taken from his decision pending these proceedings, the House would have been compelled to submit. But the Chair held that an appeal could be taken, and I raise the point of order that that must first be settled either by the Chair himself determining that no appeal can he taken, or that, if an appeal can be taken, it must be at once settled by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds, though an appeal can be taken from the decision of the Chair, that motions under proceedings for a call of the House may intervene and cut off for the time being the question of appeal. Suppose the House does not sustain the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDREDGE,] then the next thing in order will be for the House to pass upon the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Such motions as that of the gentleman from Wisconsin can come up ad infinitum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without further argument, the Chair will make a special request of the gentleman from Wisconsin that he will withdraw his motion for suspending the proceedings under the call till the House can act on the appeal of the gentleman from Maine, which will settle the whole question. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I have a great respect for the gentleman who occupies the Chair, and would do almost anything to oblige him, but I cannot do what he now requests.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair will be bound to entertain the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question being put on Mr. ELDREDGE'S motion to suspend further proceedings under the call, the Speaker pro tempore declared that in the judgment of the Chair the motion was lost.

Mr. ELDREDGE called for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 36.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McKEE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Could we not always under the ruling of the Chair prevent the orders of the House from being executed by interposing motions of this kind?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide each question of order as it arises.

Mr. McKEE. This question has arisen, that the orders of this House have not been obeyed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that it is entirely competent for this House to determine whether or not it will suspend all further proceedings under this call, and thereby suspend the execution of the warrants issued for the arrest of absent members. The Chair holds that this a question of the highest privilege, and that is the question now before the House.

Mr. BLAND. Would it be in order to move that the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion would not now be in order.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 37, nays 63, not voting 189; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Ashe, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Comingo, Cook, Creamer, Crossland, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Glover, Gunter, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hunton, Magee, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Potter, Robbins, Stone, Vance, Wells, Whitehead, and Willie—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Barrere, Biery, Buffinton, Cain, Cannon, Amos Clark, jr., Clements, Coburn, Conger, Crooke, Crounse, Field, Fort, Gooch, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Havens, Hays, John W. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Arthur, Atkins, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Beck, Begole, Berry, Bradley, Bright, Buckner, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, Harmer, Henry R. Harris, Hathorn, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, Herndon, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Leach, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Luttrell, Lynch, Marshall, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McLean, Merriam, Mitchell, Monroe, Morey, Myers, Negley, Niblack, Niles, Nunn, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Isaac C. Parker, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Purman, Randall, Ray, Read, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Sloan, Sloss, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Stanard, Standiford, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles A. Thomas, Thompson, Todd, Tremain, Waddell, Waldron, Walls, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiteley, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodworth, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—189.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms is now at the bar of the House with certain gentlemen taken into custody as absentees, and is ready to make return on the writ ordered by the House.

The SERGEANT-AT-ARMS. Mr. Speaker, in obedience to the order of the House, I now have at its bar Mr. FINCK, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. ARTHUR, Mr. BUCKNER, Mr. BANNING, Mr. STANDIFORD, Mr. PAGE, Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, and Mr. DOBBINS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. FINCK, at a call of the House made by its order you failed to respond to your name and were recorded as an absentee. What excuse have you to offer for being absent from the sitting of the House without its leave?

Mr. FINCK. Mr. Speaker, at the hour of ten o'clock last evening, by an arrangement with gentlemen upon the democratic side of the House, in order that we might relieve each other, I was one of those detailed to go to bed; and at the hour of ten o'clock promptly, in obedience to our arrangement, I repaired to bed and slept from that time till about six o'clock this morning, when I made my appearance in the House. I will also add that at the time I repaired to my hotel I was physically in a condition that required me to go there, having remained in the House during its continuous session, over thirty hours. I do not, however, plead this as an excuse; I only want to stand honorably by the arrangement which I made with my colleagues. I will state further that I had paired with Governor WARD, of New Jersey.

Mr. COBB, of North Carolina. I move that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINCK] be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The return of the Sergeant-at-Arms having obviated the necessity for my appeal from the decision of the Chair, I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the gentleman the propriety of withholding the withdrawal until the return upon the writ shall have been fully heard by the House.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. So far as I am concerned, I do not care to press the appeal any further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will understand, then, if there be no objection, that the appeal of the gentleman from Maine from the decision of the Chair is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. ADAMS, at a call of the House made by its order you failed to respond to your name and were recorded as an absentee. What excuse have you to offer for being absent from the sittings of the House without its leave?

Mr. ADAMS. I imagine I have pretty much the same excuse that almost every other absentee has. I had remained here for over thirty-six hours continuously. I found it necessary to refresh myself with a little sleep, and went home for that purpose. I must say that I rather overslept myself. That is the cause of my absence.

Mr. HAYS. I move that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ADAMS] be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. ARTHUR, at a call of the House made by its order you failed to respond to your name and were recorded as an absentee. What excuse have you to offer for being absent from the sittings of the House without its leave?

Mr. ARTHUR. All I have to say is that I had not changed my linen or slept during forty hours. I went home to get a change of linen, and returned as speedily as I could.

Mr. FIELD. I move that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ARTHUR] be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. BUCKNER, at a call of the House made by its order you failed to respond to your name and were recorded as an absentee. What excuse have you to offer for being absent from the sittings of the House without its leave?

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, I was here until about one o'clock this morning, and intended to remain as long as any one. But Mr. HOOPER, a venerable and respectable gentleman on the other side of the House, was very anxious to get some one to pair with him, and I agreed to pair with him, and did so.

A MEMBER. How many did you pair with?

Mr. BUCKNER. I paired with nobody else. I did so the more readily because, under the arrangements which had been made on my side of the House, I was regarded somewhat as a supernumerary.

Mr. CONGER. I have this only to say, that I think the offense of the gentleman instead of being excused is aggravated by his having taken away a gentleman from our side of the House; but I understand this is his first offense.

Mr. ELDREDGE. We would have as much reason to complain on our side of the delinquency of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] in that respect.

There being no objection, Mr. BUCKNER was excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. BANNING, of Ohio, at the call of the House made by order of the House you failed to respond to your name and are recorded as an absentee. What excuse have you to offer for being absent from the sittings of the House without its leave?

Mr. BANNING. I went home with the ten o'clock democratic relief. I had been here for about thirty-six hours before. I overslept myself this morning, so that I am here a little late. That is about the only excuse I have to offer.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Since the democrats are running the House and giving general leave of absence, I suppose the gentleman's excuse must be held sufficient. I move that he be excused.

Mr. FIELD. I desire to make one observation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan object to the gentleman being excused?

Mr. FIELD. I will object unless there be some further explanation given. I wish to know whether this democratic relief is an unlawful combination?

Mr. BANNING. Not at all. It is a wing of the democratic party.

Mr. CRUTCHFIELD. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BANNING, was present at the roll-call and voted from the gallery.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the gentleman being excused until he makes a still further explanation. I desire the gentleman to explain under what construction of our rules he assumed the right to vote from the gallery.

The question being taken on the motion to excuse Mr. BANNING, it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. STANDIFORD, at a call of the House by the order of the House you failed to respond to your name and were recorded as an absentee. What excuse have you to offer for being absent from the sittings of the House without its leave?

Mr. STANDIFORD. I am about in the same condition with my friend from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.] I was here forty hours without any sleep and was suffering from a very severe cold, and therefore thought I would go home and rest a little. I wanted also to put on clean linen.

Mr. BANNING. I move that the gentleman be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I must insist on the point of order that the sheep shall be separated from the goats. I ask that the gentlemen who are not at the bar shall be directed to resume their seats.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will please be seated.

Mr. PAGE, of California, at a call of the House by the order of the House you failed to respond to your name and were recorded as an absentee. What excuse have you to offer for being absent from the sittings of the House without its leave?

Mr. PAGE. I have been here continuously for forty hours. I needed rest and went home, and returned about six o'clock.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move that the gentleman be excused.

Mr. PARSONS. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Several MEMBERS. That is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, before entertaining the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. PARSONS,] will first submit the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] that his colleague be excused.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection if the gentleman will turn over a new page.

Mr. PAGE. I have done that already.

The motion that Mr. PAGE be excused was agreed to.

Mr. PARSONS. I now move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. ELDREDGE. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 45.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PARSONS. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I object to the gentleman withdrawing the motion.

Mr. SPEER. The gentleman has a right to withdraw his motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman has the right to withdraw the motion if objection be made.

Mr. SHANKS. During the time the democrats were before the House there was no objection to their being excused; but as soon as a republican appears the gentleman from Wisconsin calls for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman is mistaken. We make no difference between republicans and democrats in that respect. This side of the House wants to excuse all of them.

Mr. SPEER. I wish to understand the Chair. Does the Chair rule that a single objection prevents a gentleman, the yeas and nays having been called, from withdrawing his motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair's decision is this: That after the yeas and nays have been ordered upon a motion, that motion can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPEER. The Chair is in error. I do not want to appeal from his decision, but the Chair is certainly in error.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, then, will agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania and decide that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PARSONS] has the right to withdraw his motion, leaving it to any gentleman who chooses to appeal from the decision.

No objection being made, the motion was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, at a call of the House by order of the House you failed to respond to your name and were recorded as an absentee. What excuse have you to offer for being absent from the sittings of the House without its leave?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I was here in continuous session for about thirty-four hours, and I should have staid through the night, but I found all the lounges occupied, and I wanted to get more comfortable lodgings. I came back early this morning, as soon as I could.

Mr. FIELD. I move that Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. DOBBINS, upon a call of the House you have been recorded absent. What excuse have you to offer for being absent from the sessions of the House without its leave?

Mr. ELDREDGE. How has the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PARSONS] been disposed of?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the excuse of the gentleman from New Jersey first.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I think there is great force in the old adage that the first law of nature is self-preservation. I was here at the opening of the session Wednesday morning last and have been continuously from that time to the present, except for about five and a half hours. I left this morning at four o'clock and went to my room and took a very comfortable nap, appreciated it very highly, and immediately afterward got my breakfast and came directly back. I wish further to say my age requires I should at least rest five hours out of forty-five.

Mr. SPEER. I move the gentleman be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair wishes to state that on subsequent reflection he decides the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PARSONS] had the right to withdraw his motion.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If the Chair had made that decision originally I would have renewed the motion.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be permitted to make a brief statement prefacing a motion I intend to make.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I do not know how much I may speak for my associates, but I think it is demonstrated that it is beyond the power of human endurance to legislate under rules such as exist here. We have sought fairly, earnestly, and continuously to accomplish an end which met with the approval of the majority of the House, as our friends on the other side will agree, but it is now demonstrated beyond the possibility of doubt that legislation is impossible as long as the rules of the House remain as they are. To the extent of human endurance have we carried on this attempt in good faith and in fairness, and I am happy to say in good spirit toward our opponents, who availed themselves as they might of the advantages of the present rules. I for one do not desire to continue longer this torture for the purpose of attempting to accomplish an impossibility, and I therefore move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ALBRIGHT demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 92.

So (more than one-fifth of those present having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CESSNA. Before the roll is called, I ask unanimous consent to make a request personal to myself.

There was no objection.

Mr. CESSNA. I went away last evening at the request of the Speaker of the House, who stated his desire I should retire for a time, as he wished to make further use of my services in the Chair. I now ask to be excused for any absence which may be reported against me up to this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is unanimously excused.

Mr. RANDALL. Why, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman was excused during the night, when he was reported absent on the call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is so.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 76, nays 60, not voting 153; as follows:

Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—153.

During the roll-call,

Mr. RANDALL said: I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I object.

The yeas and nays were read.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey, stated that he was paired with Mr. STORM, who if present would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. SNYDER stated that he was paired with Mr. HERNDON, of Texas, who if present would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I paired with my colleague, Mr. SLOAN, until ten o'clock this morning, and that time having expired I will vote in the affirmative.

Mr. FORT. I wish to put this question to the Chair: Can gentlemen who have been brought in by the Sergeant-at-Arms under arrest be allowed to vote on this roll-call? I see that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and others voted just as soon as they got into the House, although they have been reported absent without the leave of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will respond to the gentleman from Illinois by saying that, in his judgment, members under arrest for absence from the House have not the right to vote on the pending motion.

Mr. SPEER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] was not in the Hall during the roll-call, and I want to know whether his name is upon the list?

Mr. RANDALL. Announce the result.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize all who are under arrest and have not been excused.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. FORT. I desire to have the name of Mr. COX called, to see whether he voted on this motion or not.

Mr. COX. Of course I did, as I was here during the roll-call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has voted.

Mr. FORT. He is not entitled to vote, as he was not in the Hall when the last name was called, and besides is under arrest.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. STEVENS, of Massachusetts, who came in with Mr. COX, also voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides those who were absent on the call of the House and are under arrest and who came into the Hall during this roll-call are not entitled to vote.

Mr. PAGE. Those who were excused have a right to vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I went to see a sick colleague, and when I came back here the roll was being called as I came in. I voted; but if any member objects, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that all the proceedings under this call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The adjournment decides that point. If the House adjourns, the call of the House falls with it.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. The point having been made that several gentleman voted, no doubt unintentionally, who were not entitled to vote, and as the rule as I understand it has been carried out in one instance and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] compelled to withdraw his vote, I think it only fair it should be carried out to the furthest extent. There are two or three other gentlemen whom I recognize as having been absent during the call of the House, and I have been here long enough to know them, who inadvertently, I have no doubt, voted on this roll-call; and if one member is compelled to withdraw his vote, I think all who were not entitled to vote because absent without leave should also withdraw their votes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair responds by saying that he was not aware of the fact any members had voted who were not entitled to vote.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I was absent at the time the call of the House was ordered, having paired with a gentleman on the other side, but I do not understand I am under arrest. If, however, there be any objection to my voting under the circumstances, I will withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York is among the number of those who are on the list of the Sergeant-at-Arms reported absent without the leave of the House.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. STANARD. I was not in the House when the call of the House was ordered, but I came here before the motion to adjourn was decided, and my name being called I voted. I supposed I had the right to vote when my name was called, but if I am not entitled to vote I ask my name be withdrawn.

Mr. STEVENS, of Massachusetts. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. WARD, of New Jersey. I understand that I was excused on the call of the House; and if so, of course I had the right to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman had the right to vote, he being excused.

Mr. DARRALL. I entered the Hall without interruption and voted, as I supposed I had the right to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I think the gentleman was absent without leave on the call of the House.

Mr. DARRALL. I was; I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CESSNA. Let me ask a parliamentary question. I want to know whether all persons under arrest and not excused are not precluded from voting on this motion to adjourn, while all who were under arrest and excused are entitled to vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is so.

Mr. MAYNARD. The use of the phrase "under arrest" is the cause of all this trouble.

Mr. STANARD. I certainly was not under arrest, though paired and not here during the call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All who were absent and not excused are not entitled to vote.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. There seems to be an attempt to discriminate and make a distinction between those formally arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms and those absent subject to arrest. Now I apprehend, Mr. Speaker, that in regard to these two classes of persons there can be no possible difference so far as the legal right of the parties to vote is concerned. The mere formal matter of the arrest can make no possible difference. If a member can be deprived of his vote at all it is because he is a delinquent and has been so pronounced by a vote of the House. The mere fact that he has not been arrested can make no possible difference whatever.

But before this proceeding goes further, I want to know (and although I have not been, I presume, formally arrested by order of the House, I am one of the delinquents and stand here confessing that fact in the presence of the House)—I want to know upon what principle it can be held that a member of the House who is here in his seat when the roll is called shall be deprived of the privilege of voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair answers the gentleman from Indiana by saying that all the proceedings up to the point to which he alludes are proceedings under a call of the House. One object of a call of the House, as the gentleman well knows, is to determine who are and who are not present; and when that call develops the absence of any gentleman, then, in the judgment of the Chair, that gentleman, until he shall have been excused by the House, is not entitled to vote upon any proceeding pertaining to the call. It is upon that point alone that the ruling of the Chair is made.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HALE, of Maine, and others. Regular order!

Mr. ELDREDGE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say further to the gentleman from Indiana that the legal presumption under such circumstances is that the gentleman is out of doors—not in the Hall; and if the Chair had been disposed to apply that rule strictly to the gentleman from Indiana, it is possible that he might have been sustained in refusing to recognize the gentleman until the House had passed upon his case, or until, by an adjournment, all proceedings in regard to the call of the House had been wiped out.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. The Chair will understand——

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain no further discussion upon this point. If the gentleman from Indiana or any other gentleman in the same situation desires to vote, the Chair will submit to the House the question whether he shall be allowed to do so.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The question of order I have been seeking to raise is that the gentleman from Indiana has no more right to speak in the House than to vote.

Mr. SHANKS. Before the vote is announced I would like an opportunity to read a declaration from the democratic platform of 1872.

Several MEMBERS. O, no! Regular order!

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (at ten o'clock and twenty-five minutes a. m., Friday, January 29.) The motion to adjourn having been agreed to, the House stands adjourned until Saturday at twelve o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be made if there be no objection, copies of the papers being left on the files.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LOGAN. On the day before yesterday there was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs a resolution calling on the Secretary of War for information relative to the arrest and imprisonment of John S. Carr, United States customs officer in Alaska. I am instructed by the committee to report it back, and if there be no objection I ask that it be passed. It merely calls for information.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I must object to the consideration of any resolution at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution. It will lie over.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of William A. Wise, praying for an amendment of the pension laws so as to allow arrears of pension in certain cases, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1175) extending the provisions of the act approved June 4, 1872, entitled, "An act granting a pension to A. Schuyler Sutton," submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Hiram Sawtelle, guardian of Lydia J. Church, orphan child of the late Nathaniel G. Church, late private in Company E, Third Regiment Maine Volunteers, praying that a pension may be granted said child, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1205) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Lydia A. Church, minor daughter of Nathaniel G. Church.

The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SARGENT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire into the expediency of reducing the number of navy-yards and of naval hospitals, and authorized to visit the different navy-yards and naval hospitals on the Atlantic coast for the purpose of such inquiry, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1075) for the protection of the postal rights of the inmates of insane asylums, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the petition of Peter O'Farrell and others, corresponding committee of the workingmen of Kansas, praying compensation for two hours' extra labor per day performed for the Government from May 19, 1869, to August 15, 1872, to report the same back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, because it does not relate to any of the duties that are properly devolved upon that committee. I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change of reference will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1196) making an appropriation for the improvement of the military wagon-road from Scottsburgh, Oregon, to Camp Stewart, Oregon, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1081) to reimburse the State of Oregon for moneys paid by said State in the suppression of Indian hostilities during the Modoc war, in the years 1872 and 1873, to report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, inasmuch as there is no law authorizing such appropriation, and the investigation involved in it does not belong to the Committee on Appropriations. I suggest that it go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee will be discharged, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, if there be no objection.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the petition of Nathaniel G. Smith, postmaster at Flemington, New Jersey, praying relief from liability incurred by loss of postage-stamps stolen by burglars, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1206) for the relief of Nathaniel G. Smith, postmaster at Flemington, New Jersey.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Elijah J. Woolum, of Alabama, praying the passage of an act for his relief to pay for certain mail service performed from June 1 to November 1, 1865, under military orders and contract, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 976) to promote economy and efficiency in the marine-hospital service, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BOUTWELL subsequently said: I ask the Senate to allow a bill reported from the Committee on Commerce in regard to the marine-hospital service which was placed on the Calendar this morning, to be recommitted to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

THE 3.65 BONDS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1204) for the payment of interest on 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia, instruct me to report the same back. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to allow this bill to be passed at the present time, inasmuch as the faith of Congress is pledged to the payment of this interest, and it falls due on Monday next, and the coupons go to protest unless we can pass this bill in season to get it through the House of Representatives in order to meet that contingency. With that statement, I ask that it may be read, and I trust to get the unanimous consent of the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to observe that if the consideration of the bill excites comment, I shall object. I wish to reserve that right.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator will have that right anyway. I shall not interfere with the business of his committee which comes up this morning.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $182,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of the interest on the bonds of the District of Columbia, known as 3.65 bonds, due on February 1, 1875, issued under the act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874. This interest is to be paid by the Treasurer of the United States, or the assistant treasurer of the United States in New York, on surrender of the proper coupons. The sum thus appropriated is to be considered and adjusted as a part of the proper proportional sum to be paid by the United States toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, and toward the payment of the interest on the funded debt of the District.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Printing be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4531) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1209) making an appropriation for the improvement of the Coquille River, in Oregon, by the construction of a canal connecting its waters with those of the Pacific Ocean; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. PACIFIC MAIL SUBSIDY.

Mr. BOGY. I offer a resolution which I send to the Chair.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows;

Whereas the subsidy granted to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in 1872 was obtained by improper means and influences: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the legality and expediency of repealing the act of June 1, 1872, authorizing a subsidy to the said Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

The reading of the resolution was interrupted by

Mr. SPRAGUE. Is that subject to an objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After it is read.

Mr. SPRAGUE. If my objection will prevent its reading, I desire to interpose it now, merely because the resolution takes time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator objects.

Mr. BOGY. In presenting the resolution I might have read it myself. I shall claim that right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution can be read. If the Senator desires it to be read, it will be read.

The reading of the resolution was concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island object to the resolution being referred?

Mr. SPRAGUE. No, sir.

Mr. BOGY. I desire that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions, the Senate will proceed under the order to the consideration of bills from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that the Senate postpone indefinitely the following bills, which are reported unfavorably by the Committee on Public Lands. I desire their indefinite postponement in order to clear the Calendar of them. The first is the bill (S. No. 174) for the relief of certain settlers upon homestead and pre-emption lands.

Mr. CLAYTON. I should like to inquire what bill that is.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to have the bill read, to see what it is before we postpone it indefinitely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill. It provides in the first section that in all cases where settlers upon public lands under the provisions of the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States shall have paid double minimum price by reason of their location within any designated railroad route, which route shall be so changed by the final location of the road as to exclude said lands from the limits within which double minimum price is to be charged, the excess above $1.25 per acre shall be refunded to the person so paying the same, or his legal representatives.

The second section provides that settlers under the homestead laws who, by reason of such withdrawal and subsequent change, have received but eighty acres of land shall be entitled to eighty acres additional, to be selected from any of the public lands of the United States open to settlement or pre-emption at the minimum price.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands whether they report against this bill because there is legislation already covering it or because they are opposed to the principle of the bill? On which ground is it?

Mr. SPRAGUE. Somewhat on both grounds. It reverses the whole policy of the land system. The Senator, if he has an interest in the bill, will favor it more by having a new one referred to the committee than taking up time with this. I trust he will permit me to get this off the Calendar.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest to the chairman that he had better pass it over by letting it stand on the Calendar. There can be no harm done by that.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move to postpone indefinitely the bill (S. No. 309) to extend the time for proof and payment on pre-emption claims upon the public lands.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear that bill read.

The bill was read.

Mr. SPRAGUE. This bill embraces all the lands that are pre-empted, whereas we have occasionally given relief in special cases. I trust that this bill will be indefinitely postponed, and I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I now move to postpone the bill (S. No. 904) to provide revenue from the sale of public lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Now I move to postpone indefinitely the bill (S. No. 872) to quiet the title of settlers on certain railroad lands.

The motion was agreed to.

OREGON CENTRAL RAILROAD.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I have four railroad land-grant bills before me. They grant nothing but the right of way, and they are in accordance with the policy of the Senate. I ask that they may be passed by their titles. If any Senator desires a reconsideration, I shall take pleasure in moving a reconsideration if he finds that they grant anything more. The first is Senate bill No. 584.

The bill (S. No. 584) providing for the permanent location of the southern terminus of the Oregon Central Railroad, and to amend the act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville, in the State of Oregon," approved May 4, 1870, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Public Lands reported an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill. The words to be inserted are:

That for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the terminus near McMinnville, as fixed and established by the act of which this is amendatory, to some suitable point on the line of the Oregon and California Railroad, not farther south than Eugene City, nor farther north than Junction City, in the State of Oregon, such terminus within said limits to be selected by the company within six months from the passage of this act, there is hereby granted to the Oregon Central Railroad Company, now engaged in constructing said road, and to its successors and assigns, the right of way through the public lands of the width of one hundred feet on each side of said road, and the right to take from the adjacent public lands materials for constructing said road, and also the necessary lands for depots, stations, side-tracks, and other needful uses in operating the road, not exceeding forty acres at any one place; and also each alternate section of the public lands, not mineral, excepting coal or iron lands, designated by odd numbers, nearest to said road, to the amount of ten such alternate sections per mile, on each side thereof, not otherwise disposed of or reserved, or held by valid pre-emption or homestead right at the time of the passage of this act. And in case the quantity of ten full sections per mile cannot be found on each side of said road within the said limits of twenty miles, other lands, designated as aforesaid, shall be selected,
